Retired professor has second career planned

Weather observer Dalias Price, who will pursue a second career selling insurance, here measures the amount of rainfall. (News photo by Bob Kasinecz)

by Jerry Fallstrom

Dalias Price, professor in the geography and geology department, retired Monday after 42 years of teaching, the last 22 at Eastern. But don't expect to find Price wiling away the hours in a rocking chair.

"I'd be concerned if I just sat in a chair. Some of my retired friends say they are busier in retirement than when they were working," Price said.

Price, longtime Charleston weather observer, will have a second career selling insurance to keep him busy. He is working on a part-time basis for the Golden Rule Insurance Co. of Lawrenceville and Indianapolis.

"To abruptly cut off your career can be a traumatic experience," the 67-year-old Price said. Price said he began selling insurance two years ago, planning ahead for the day he would leave Eastern.

"I enjoy it immensely. Insurance has given me insights into the business world which I didn't have before."

Price said providing information about insurance to people agrees with his philosophy to "give service to my fellow man. That's why I messed around with weather and teaching for so long," he said.

Price said the insurance and weather businesses have a common ground which allow him to "give service to my fellow man."

Price has monitored Charleston's weather daily for the National Weather Service for 21 years free of charge. He provides temperatures for four newspapers and two television stations. Price said he will continue in his retirement to monitor daily weather readings.

In the past 21 years, Price said there has been only one day in which weather data was not recorded. When Price is away from home, he recruits family members, friends or neighbors to record weather data.

Although many people ask Price to predict what the weather will be like, he is ambivalent about doing so.

"I get thrown into weather prediction more than I want. You need computer equipment and other instruments which I just do not have here," Price said, who gathers data from his home at 414 Cedar Drive in Charleston.

He said it is impossible to predict weather more than 30 days in advance.

Textbook library renovation nearing completion

Herb Meeker

Renovation of the textbook library in Pemberton Hall is "70 percent complete," Everett Alms, physical plant director said Friday.

A Pesotum contracting firm has been working on the textbook library renovation since January, 1980. The firm will be paid approximately $20,000 for the work, which is scheduled to be completed by August 15, Alms said. "The contractor has told me he expects to be finished by the last week of July."

The textbook library has been located in Buzzard Gymnasium since the move from Pemberton in December, 1979. The Pemberton library facility needed several improvements to speed up distribution of textbooks to students.

Richard Sandefer, textbook library director, explained the improvements at Pemberton.

"The building's floors on all three levels have been structurally reinforced to eliminate the "overweight problem." A freight elevator and loading dock has been added to move the books more quickly. The first floor lobby (where the actual book distribution takes place) has been remodeled for better traffic control, Sandefer said.

Sandefer said textbook distribution for fall will be conducted in Buzzard Gymnasium, not in the remodeled Pemberton. "I'm not sure when we'll move to Pemberton, either before spring book distribution or after."

Sandefer said there are plans to inform the students of unclear record designation more effectively in the future. Unclear record status indicates students who have failed to return books or pay fees.

"I may set up two lines, one clear and one unclear and post lists indicating who has unclear records," Sandefer said.

Along with the renovation process, the textbook library is standardizing inventory in order to convert to a new distribution system in the near future.

The regular textbook library staff, with five additional workers hired for this summer, are placing three stickers in 190,000 textbooks. "We're shooting to complete putting the stickers on all the books by the middle of August," Sandefer said.

Sandefer said the new stickers alone will not help distribution this fall. The stickers are part of a new system which will eliminate the IBM control cards, which according to Sandefer "cut down on efficiency."

Sandefer said the new system is still in the planning stages. He hopes to incorporate new methods to "scratch from the files" books which have been sold to students. Currently 30,000 textbooks are still on file but have been sold to students in the past years.

Sandefer would like a system which issues receipts to students returning books at the end of each semester.

Sandefer does not anticipate any problems with keeping the textbooks in Buzzard Gymnasium. However, the heat (due to the lack of air-conditioning), humidity and termites have had slight effects on the staff and books.

Russ Green, a pipe fitter, is threading pipe for the heaters at the textbook library. Renovation has been underway since January and is 70 percent complete. The work is scheduled to be completed by August 15. (News photo by Kenith Hathcock)

Hofer in car accident

by Vicki Shaw

Stephen Hofer, assistant professor in the speech communication department, was treated and released after a one car accident late Friday morning.

Hofer, 40, of 1112 A W. Hayes, told police he was heading westbound on Grant St. just east of Orchard Drive. He said he and the passenger of the car, Mary McLaughling, 23, of the same residence, got into an argument.

Hofer said McLaughling grabbed the wheel and turned, it causing the car to make a sharp right turn.

According to a police report, the car left the road, went over the curb, into the yard and through bushes leading to the patio of the Guy Harper residence at 11 Orchard Drive. No ticket was issued by police.

The report said the car continued to go through the patio, destroying two chairs, a table and a kettle type grill. The car hit the south wall of the house destroying approximately 10 feet of wall, door and doorway.

According to the police report, extensive damage was done. An estimate of the damage will be given at a future date.

Hofer said the car door flew open and he fell out before the car hit the house.

Hofer resigned in March as station manager of WELH, Eastern's campus radio station.

"Even that is very generalized, he said. Price said the National Weather Service is experimenting with predicting weather three months in advance. He said the service has claimed 60 percent accuracy in the long-range forecasts, which is "just above flipping a coin," he said.

University of Illinois. "I was always interested in weather. I was involved with it in classes in my first year of college." He became a research assistant to a climatologist while there, and wrote his master's thesis on climatology, he said.

Price's interest in weather goes back to his undergraduate days at the University of Illinois. During his career, Price has taught at four universities besides Eastern, including an 11-year stint at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. Price came to Eastern from SIU in 1958 to become department chairman of geography—geology. He said he liked the idea of a small university and small classes. The enrollment at SIU was booming then, Price said, and large classes were on the increase. "I didn't want to be a party to mass teaching. It is certainly not effective for me."

After 15 years as department head, Price stepped down to return to the classroom full-time.

"Teaching is my first love. I happen to be one of those strange ducks who enjoys teaching. It is just a job to so many people."

Interests such as photography, reading and map collecting keep Price's time occupied. Price calls himself a "student of the Amish," whom he admires for their old-fashioned lifestyle. He also enjoys classical music and says he is addicted to travel.

"I never tire of going over the same road twice. People always say Kansas is a boring stateto drive through but I find Kansas to be a very intriguing state," Price said.

While driving, Price said he studies the physical geography of an area and plays games such as studying the garden crops of farmhouses.

Weather patterns for the past 30 years have brought cooler weather and slightly lower temperatures than average, Price said. Although it has been unusually warm for this time of year, Price said an indication of the lower temperatures is that Charleston has not reached 100 degrees for several years.

The harsh winters Charleston endured from 1976-1979 were similar to average winters for central Wisconsin, Price said. The probability of having three such winters in a row was "one in a million," he added.

Price called the weather of the Midwest "fascinating." "No two winters are alike. We're in the battleground between the warm in the south and the cold in the north," he said.

Boredom. The word is not in Price's vocabulary. A second career, varied interests and of course, the weather will assure the word remains foreign to him.

Union board members to evaluate SIU union

Herb Meeker
 Five members of the University Union Board will travel to Carbondale Tuesday in order to study Southern Illinois University's student union. Union Board members, Dale Tuttle, Union Arrangements office, Bob Glover, student body president, Bonnie Bijack, Ken Potts and Terry Rele will visit SIU-C Tuesday afternoon to get ideas for student union management. "They've had success with union operations and that's what we're looking for," Glover said Friday. The study group will pay special attention to SIU-C's craft shop, a student-funded facility which sponsors activities in hobbies such as wood work and ceramics. Dale Tuttle said a lot of universities have been running craft shops with great success. "We're looking into the possibilities of implementing such a facility here at Eastern." Last semester, 1,000 students were surveyed on the benefit of a university craft shop. Half of the students surveyed showed interest in a craft shop. Tuttle said there are "no specific plans" as yet concerning a craft shop at Eastern, but added "There is a general feeling the Union should be more diversified toward the student body's needs." Glover agreed with Tuttle and mentioned criticisms against the Union food services needing to adapt to student life. "We need to find the prosperous areas in the Union and develop them further," Glover said. Tuttle said the Union Board is planning additional trips to Northwestern and University of Illinois-Chicago Circle later this summer.

Bill passes to lift gasohol state tax

A bill calling for a temporary lifting of the four percent state tax on gasohol until July 1, 1982 was passed by the Illinois House last week. The bill was sponsored by Rep. Harry "Babe" Woodyard, R-Charleston. The bill goes next to Gov. James Thompson's desk for his signature. The bill is aimed at stimulating the use of gasohol and to make it competitive in cost with unleaded gasoline, according to Woodward. Gasohol is made up of 90 percent gasoline and 10 percent alcohol. In 1982, the state sales tax would be phased back in at a rate of one percent per year, according to Woodyard. The bill was introduced by Sen. Max Coffey, R-Charleston. "Buying gasohol has a patriotic appeal, but still people will buy a less-expensive product instead of an equally good, more expensive one," Woodyard said.

Students deserve teacher pay hike

Students stand to lose more than teachers if the proposed 8.5 percent salary increase for university faculty members is reduced.

While the haggling continues in the legislature over the dispute of the teachers' pay raises for the coming year, it is easy to lose sight of the most important reason for giving the teachers as large of an increase as is financially possible.

The need to provide incentive for teachers to do their best and thus improve the quality of education tends to get lost amidst the cries of eroding buying power because of inflation and a lack of commitment toward higher education directed toward the legislature.

Yet the salary increase of 8.5 percent, a .9 percent difference from the 7.6 percent Gov. James Thompson has said he will approve, is the only real way for Illinois' system of higher education to begin to make advances in upgrading the quality of teaching and education in a state which is lagging behind the rest of the nation in teachers' pay.

The difficulty in maintaining a high caliber teaching staff is evident by the turnover of teachers both at Eastern and throughout the state, as teachers look for higher paying jobs with out of state universities offering decreased work loads. A lack of continuity in staff members, and the unavoidable "break in" period caused by a turnover of faculty not only creates confusion in individual departments, but also among students who cope with new instructors and advisers and are never able to feel comfortable with constant changes in faculty occurring.

The House of Representatives' tabling of a proposal by the House Appropriations II Committee that the salary increase be reduced to the 7.6 percent level, is one step in the right direction.

However the House must still pass the bill and the governor must sign the bill before teachers will be able to claim any victory and students any hope for more quality in their education. Those two obstacles are great, especially getting past the governor's veto stamp. Thompson has indicated strongly that he will not support the higher increase because the state's budget cannot afford the $6.54 million extra it would cost.

While both Eastern American Federation of Teachers President Carol Elder and legislative director Richard Dulka noted that legislators seem to look more favorably upon higher education now than ever before, a commitment must be made now by both the legislature and the governor toward providing for more quality in higher education. That commitment needs to come now, before Illinois universities lose the talented teachers they have to other states which realize how important higher education has become in our society.

Visit with Captain brings back memories

Back in 1955, Robert Keeshan began doing a children's show in the morning for CBS television.

Twenty-five years and 7,000 shows later, he is still at it.

It was doubtful that Keeshan or anyone else thought that when the Captain Kangaroo show began, that it would go on this long.

Last week the Captain did his 7,000th telecast. Think of that. 7,000 shows in which the Captain, a grown man, has had to speak to an audience of five to nine year old children. That has got to be rough. You would think the man would have gone crazy by now.

When I heard that he had celebrated his 7,000th show last week, I decided I had to watch the show once again. I had to see if things were still the same, whether the characters had changed or not, and if the show was still as entertaining as it was when I was nine years old.

I never liked any of the traditional children's shows when I was growing up. I was never thrilled with cartoons on Saturday morning, I would have rather stayed up and watched the late movie and then slept until the football game came on. I hated Sesame Street, and the Electric Company seemed very dull.

But Captain Kangaroo was different. I got a kick out of his stories, the characters and the skits. I guess the reason I always liked it so much was the fact that the only time I got to watch it was when I was home from school, either sick or on vacation. That made everything seem better.

So, I watched it again Monday. The Captain was still the same guy, only years older than I remembered him. What was sad was that it was obvious he was wearing a toupee, and was trying to hide his age. He shouldn't do that. I mean instead of looking like the friendly guy down the street, now he looks like your Grandfather. So what?

The skits were still there, as were the characters.

Brad
Patterson

Remember those characters? Grandfather Clock, who could always be counted on for wisdom, the Dancing Bear, who water skied on this particular show, Simon, Mr. Pennywhistle and his dog Bernard, the hilarious Salesman the Salesman, Uncle Backwards, and of course the Captain's faithful sidekick Dennis, who is always being taught a lesson by the Captain.

A few new characters have been added out of necessity, such as the popular Slim Goodbody. That's right, Slim Goodbody. He dances and sings and entertains everyone.

But as neat as it was to see these old characters again, I was not satisfied. I had to see my all-time favorite.

For fifty minutes, there was no sign of him. I began to get worried. But then, after a commercial (from Kellogg's of course, the sponser of the show for over 15 years), he appeared. Sitting in his rocking chair, Mr. Greenjeans proceeded to read us a story.

Mr. Greenjeans was still a regular on the show. I breathed a sigh of relief. What would Captain Kangaroo be without Mr. Greenjeans?

Oh, he was a lot older than I remembered him too, balding and grey at the sideburns, but he was still a great storyteller.

I hope my kids will get a chance to see Captain Kangaroo. Not only is it a little educational, but it is a highly moralistic show. At least twice each morning the Captain or another character will teach the young viewers something about right or wrong.

It just wouldn't be a weekday morning in America without Captain Kangaroo. Good luck Captain, may you go on for another 25 years.

Two-party system on the way out in '80?

The 1980 presidential campaign has once again challenged the American two-party system as ten-term Illinois congressman John Anderson makes a bid on the independent ticket.

For the first time since 1912 when Teddy Roosevelt departed from the Democratic Party and formed the Bull Moose Party, a third party candidate may have a monumental influence on the outcome of the presidential election.

Anderson states the reason for his candidacy as being that the majority of Americans are dissatisfied with the Carter-Reagan choice. He describes the pairing as being "not a choice but a dilemma."

The "dilemma" that many Americans feel this election year, of choosing between a democratic or republican president could prompt a greater number of candidates to deviate from the two major parties in the future.

It seems Americans have grown more and more weary with the offerings of both parties and unless more popular candidates are produced, our two-party system may be in jeopardy.

John Anderson may not get elected in November, but he has gained a lot of support from both republicans and democrats who have departed from their respective parties temporarily, because they find neither major party candidate suitable.

Most of Anderson's popularity has been acquired because he says he speaks for the millions and millions of voters who are "turned off and who view the two-party system as failing."

Linda

A devout democrat may vote for Anderson this election year because Anderson is that alternative, as opposed to sticking with his party or not voting at all. Are voters going to be looking for more alternatives in future presidential elections? Is the American two-party system on the way out? The answer to these questions will only be known as more presidential elections are held.

However, the trend of "alternative candidates" may begin with this election. Anderson's candidacy may assure Ronald Reagan's election or it may throw the election into the House of Representatives for the first time since 1825 and for only the third time in U.S. history. The amount of Anderson's influence will be seen in November.

But John Anderson may just be the beginning of a string of candidates who offer themselves as "the other option."

Either the two major parties are going to have to find more suitable candidates that appeal to the masses, or take the risk of losing an election to an alternative.

Health Service begins to schedule appointments

by Marsha Hausser

In response to recent student demand, the Health Service will begin scheduling appointments with each of the three doctors beginning Tuesday.

The appointments can be made for 8:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Tuesday through Thursday by calling 581-3013.

Dr. Jerry Heath, director of the Health Service, said a survey taken of students last semester indicated that they would prefer to schedule appointments to cut down their waiting time.

"Since students were interested and we're not as busy in the summer, we decided to go with it on a trial basis," Heath said.

Realizing that the appointment system may provide an answer to students' limited time problems, Heath also said the system may not work because of sudden changes in students' schedules, causing appointments to be canceled.

"We don't know if it will work. It hasn't worked before," Heath said.

Approximately six or seven years ago, an appointment system failed during the regular school year because of appointment cancellations and a large number of walk-in patients, Heath said.

Depending on the success of the system this summer, it may be carried over to fall semester, he said.

An appointment will not be necessary to see a doctor, but students with appointments will be honored first.

Emergency situations which come up will take priority over appointments,

Heath said, although he said the number of emergencies which occur in the summer are fewer than during the regular school year since fewer students are on campus.

FY 81 city budget pending

by Jerry Fallstrom

More special meetings of the Charleston City Council will be needed before the 1980-81 budget is finalized, City Commissioner Olga Durham said after a special Saturday morning meeting held to discuss the budget.

Durham said the budget will be finalized "sometime in July. We're behind on this (the budget). I imagine we'll have to have a few special meetings of the council to get it finished," Durham said.

The 1980-81 fiscal year began on June 1.

Council members agreed on an 11 percent pay boost for regular city personnel. Durham said "some adjustment is needed" for salaries of supervisory personnel.

The council also authorized borrowing $160,000 to be used for the city's side-channel reservoir project until general obligation bonds can be sold for the $3.6 million project.

The loan was acquired from the Charleston National Bank at 7 percent interest. The loan is payable in 90 days, Katie Pollock, deputy city clerk said. By that time, funds from the sale of bonds will be available, she said.

Although the city budget is not a topic on the agenda for Tuesday's regular city council meeting, it is expected to be discussed.

Also on the agenda is a resolution calling for $35,000 for improvements to Route 130. The improvements would include widening for the curbs and gutters and sidewalk resurfacing, Pollock said.

Expanded summer events prompt UB to seek help

by Herb Meeker

Due to its involvement in the "Creative Future" workshop program, the University Board is trying to recruit more students to help with an expanded schedule of events this summer.

Booker Suggs, assistant coordinator of student activities, said, "This is the first time the UB has worked with the summer workshops, and they were a factor in bringing on this recruitment drive."

The "Creative Future" workshops offer lectures by visiting faculty. The UB will coordinate the lectures for the workshops this summer.

The UB is a student-funded program, which coordinates activities such as movies, lectures, concerts and special events to entertain and inform Eastern students. UB workers volunteer their free time to stage activities each semester.

Suggs said this is the first "all out effort" to bring in new people for the summer.

"People with all types of talents are invited to join the UB this summer." Nick Lloyd, UB summer chairperson, said, "especially artists to help with the publicity work."

Lloyd said this summer there are only two UB coordinators on campus. Last year four coordinators were able to help with the activities.

The UB activity schedule includes five lectures, all associated with the Future workshops, six video tape presentations, three movies, two open stages and two special events; the Greek and Black Student Union Reunions and the campus Crazy Day.

Lloyd said most of the activities can be handled by a small number of people but added, "I'm in favor of getting as many people as possible to help with summer UB."

Suggs said "I don't foresee any problems this summer for getting all the activities off the ground."

Anyone interested in working with the UB can pick up application forms in the Student Activity office in the University Union or attend weekly meetings at 7:30 p.m. each Friday night in the Union-addition Martinsville Room.

Suggs said "We'll keep the recruitment drive open during the duration of the summer."

Lafferty, Pettigrew take shots at pro line spots

by Vickie Woodbury and Brad Paterson

Tom Pettigrew and Jack Lafferty hope to get the chance to see how much different life "in the pit" is in the National Football League.

Both former Panther standouts will be reporting to NFL training camps later this month and attempting to win spots on the offensive line.

Pettigrew, drafted on the eighth round by the Los Angeles Rams as an offensive tackle, reports to Southern California on July 19 for the rookie camp, while Lafferty, signed as a free agent by the Seattle Seahawks, reports to Cheyney, Wash. on July 17 for the American Conference club's pre-season camp.

Pettigrew went to the Rams' mini-camp in mid-May with his agent and began contract negotiations.

Although Pettigrew was reluctant to discuss the specifics of the contract, he did say that he received two one-year contracts with a number of clauses.

One of the clauses is that if he makes the opening day roster, he receives a bonus.

Lafferty was not drafted, but was signed 90 minutes after the final round when a Seattle scout came to Paris, Ill. and signed the Waukegan native to a contract.

Lafferty, a first-team Mizzlou Television Network All-American at center this past season, and an honorable mention Associated Press All-American said he was a bit disappointed at not being drafted, but not for long.

"I was a little disappointed, but only for about an hour," Lafferty said. "Then I signed, and began thinking about making Seattle."

Both players spent their respective mini-camps becoming acquainted with the teams' operation and going through physical tests.

"My leg strength was pretty good," Pettigrew said. "But the weight lifting tests showed that I need work on my upper body strength."

Lafferty said that he and the other rookies spent the three days "going through basic plays, running, and getting to know the coaches."

Pettigrew will bid for a spot in the Rams' line with 15 other rookies. Pettigrew played in the offensive line for two seasons as a Panther, then switched to defensive end during the national championship season of 1978 before returning to offense last season.

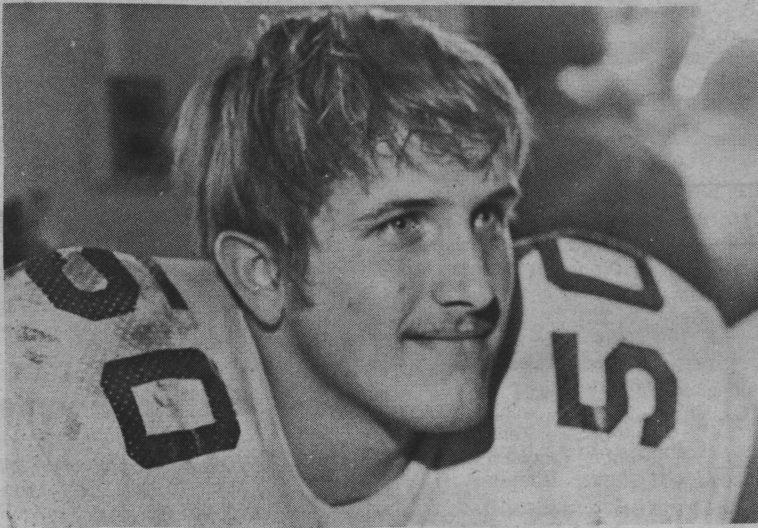

"One reason the coaches moved me back to offense is because my abilities are better suited to offense," Pettigrew said from his Roanoke, Va. home. "Now I'm trying to learn pro techniques, how to use my hands in ways that would get you holding penalties in college, but are legal in the NFL," Pettigrew said.

Lafferty will be trying to win a position at center or guard for the Seahawks.

Both players are hopeful of making the big time, but both will have different circumstances determine whether or not they do.

Pettigrew goes to a team that has a number of veterans, including an All-Pro on the roster.

"Realistically, I'm trying for a back-up position," Pettigrew said. "But they may be looking for a young guy to play a back up role for a couple of years."

Both players are hopeful of making the big time, but both will have different circumstances determine whether or not they do.

Lafferty joins a Seattle team that came into the league as an expansion team just five seasons ago, and is a team that is young and improving.

"I think they are pretty happy with who they have," Lafferty said. "They have a lot of young veterans, but I guess they feel they need some help in certain spots."

Pettigrew and Lafferty differ also in how they approach their attempts.

Pettigrew said "I will go to camp and do my best, but if I don't make it, I'll go somewhere else."

Lafferty said that this is a one-time shot for him.

"It's a shot," Lafferty said simply. "If I don't make it, I'll come back to school, finish my education, and maybe play some rugby."

ISU, Kansas State head cage slate

Eastern's last season of Division II basketball shapes up to be a strong challenge for Don Eddy's successor.

The 1980-81 cage schedule was released Monday and besides the usual array of outstanding Division II opponenets, the slate also includes two strong contenders for the Division I tournament.

The Panthers, who have been to six straight NCAA Division II tournaments and will begin Division I play in 1981-82, will travel to Manhattan, Kansas on Saturday, Jan. 10 to face the Wildcats.

K-State, alma mater of Eastern assistant Danny Beard, won the Big 8 post-season tourney this year, and came within an eyelash of defeating NCAA Division I Champion Louisville in the Midwest Regional before falling 71-69.

Later in January, the Panthers will travel to Normal to take on the Illinois State Redbirds. The two teams renewed one of the state's oldest rivalries last December as ISU edged Eastern by five points in the Illini Classic in Champaign.

The Division II powers that will grace the Lantz Gym floor include national runner-up New York Tech, who defeated Northern Michigan in the quarterfinal contest last March. Northern Michigan had eliminated Eastern in the Great Lakes regional before dropping a one-point decision to New York Tech.

Other tournament teams that will play here are Indiana State University-Evansville, Dec. 1; Wright State, Feb. 7; Central Missouri State, Feb. 11; and Hartwick, Feb. 28.
