Surles sets budget cuts for coming year

President gives second State of the University address Monday

By Patrick Guinane
Administration editor

In her second annual State of the University Address, President Carol Surles stated six broad goals for Eastern’s future, while painting a bleak picture of next year’s operating budget.

Surles said it will be “necessary to make painful cuts.” Next year Eastern regrettably needs to reallocate funds, and everyone needs to look at the budget she said.

“(We’re) holding our breath that there will be no further cuts,” Surles said.

Surles offered some “rhetorical questions” at the end of her speech, such as “How will we sustain our enrollment?” She asked if the university was doing enough with technology and if it was open minded, creative and adaptable.

Surles’ mainly focused on six goals aimed toward maintaining Eastern as “large enough to matter and small enough to care.” Her six goals for the university were:

- Enhance the quality of education
- Improve the university’s image
- Increase resources
- Address deferred maintenance
- Increase diversity
- Increase overall effectiveness.

As for the first objective, Surles said the university’s scholarly productivity has been impressive and later recognized the many awards that Eastern has accumulated during the past year.

Enhancing the school’s image involves building a presence in Springfield, something Surles said is being accomplished through programs such as “Focus on Eastern,” an informational piece geared toward the Illinois General Assembly. Surles praised the external relations department for its award-winning guide for transfer students and for the department’s publication and Internet work, saying “friendraising and fundraising are at an all-time high.”

Surles said for several years, Eastern’s funding wasn’t proportional to other state universities, but increased appropriations and capitol projects translate to increased resources, meaning the university “might be able to see above the water.”

Maintenance projects at Eastern have been held far too long, and, elaborating on her fourth point, Surles said an aggressive deferred maintenance program is underway.

While increasing diversity remains a goal, Surles said minority students currently make up 9.62 percent of the university, an all-time high.

Surles said her final objective of increasing the overall effectiveness of the university can be achieved through focusing on service delivery. Integrating technology into the classroom is one goal Eastern can strive toward, so the university remains competitive. Surles said next year the university will offer 15 online classes, while it only offered three when she came to Eastern two years ago.

After stating her six goals, Surles praised members of the Eastern community for the numerous awards they have received that reflect the merit of the university.

“The scholarly achievements of our students and faculty will carry the university,” she said.

Surles said Eastern has received $5.3 million in external grant awards and that figure will approach $6 million by the end of the fiscal year. She mentioned numerous awards from several different departments, including Eastern alumnus David Kidwell, who recently won a Pulitzer Prize.

Surles stressed the importance of the educational side of the university saying, “Their mission is our principle mission, it is our reason for being here,” but she also commended the business and student affairs divisions of the university. She cited online course registration and ethernet as ways the student life has been improved. Surles said the business affairs department is a “dedicated team of people who have risen to the occasion in many roles.”

Surles said the new food court also should improve student life. She mentioned with the upcoming Doudna Fine Arts Center renovation that “We have Gov. Ryan to thank personally for his support.”

She also praised the performances of both the academic and business areas of the university and took time to answer questions at the end of her speech. However, Surles did not name any new vice presidents and said she would name the preferred candidates in the next couple of weeks.

Only weeks after returning to campus from recovering from breast cancer, Surles commented on the collegial, peaceful, shared governance system that managed the university in her absence and was sometimes “short on peace.”

Students get ready to leave for summer

By Michelle Jones

The days of sitting in classes and taking notes and tests are almost over for most students for at least a couple of months. After students finish their finals this week, many of them will pack up and go home where work and fun will fill the hours of their days instead of English and science.

Summertime is a time for some students to earn money. Students will work at several different places this year.

Some students, like Nicole Ayala and Carolyn Smolinski, will work at clothing stores. Ayala, a sophomore psychology major, will work at Old Navy, and Smolinski, a freshman elementary education major, plans to work at Express.

A job by the pool and looking after kids is suitable for Angie Rehor, a freshman elementary education major with a concentration in middle level, who will work as a life guard and camp counselor. She said this will be her fourth summer life guarding and her second year as a camp counselor.

“I’m excited (about the jobs) because I need money, and I have fun there,” Rehor said.

Some students will find the summer a time to mix work and play. Shane Stokowski, a junior graphic design major, will return home to Peoria to work with kids with disabilities as a program aide. When not at work, Stokowski plans on starting a funk and jazz band with some friends.

Alicia Britton, a sophomore animal science major, is supposed to work with the Illinois Department of Transportation doing road construction work. She said she wants the job because she was an engineering major and she needs money. “It pays really well,” Britton said.

She also plans to spend some of her time doing volunteer work for disabled children through the Star Program. She said it is a recreational program, and she will help the children ride horses.

Brian Britton, a senior elementary education major, will return home to Decatur to work for a lawn service.

“I’m excited about going home because I like working outdoors,” he said.

Laura Turek, a junior middle level education major, said she will work at Palos Community Hospital in its business department.

Some students will find their summer months as a time to fill internships.

Extra edition

Staff report

Today’s edition of The Daily Eastern News is a special edition.

The editorial board of The News decided last week to run an extra edition to cover Eastern President Carol Surles’ State of the University address, which was held at 1 p.m. Monday.

Normally, The News is printed every day school is in session, and a special edition is printed on the Monday of finals week.

Generally, no newspaper is printed during the rest of finals week, providing time for the news staff to study for their finals.

We hope you appreciate the coverage of the president’s State of the University address.

Omega scandal continues

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — The book-keeper in the Omega international investment scheme and two others pleaded guilty Monday, less than 24 hours before they were to go on trial.

The 11th-hour guilty pleas left just five of the 19 original Omega defendants to go on trial beginning Tuesday for their roles in an offshore bank scam that prosecutors say bilked investors around the world out of more than $20 million.

Another guilty plea hearing is set for 8 a.m. Tuesday, just 90 minutes before jury selection is to begin at the federal courthouse in Springfield. Assistant U.S. Attorney Esteban Sanchez did not say which defendants might plead guilty.

"Anything is possible," Sanchez said.

Among those pleading guilty Monday was Billie A. Wilson, who admitted he tracked millions of dollars in payments from duped investors and helped Omega Trust & Trading owner Clyde Hood make up an elaborate string of excuses to calm angry customers.

Hood, Wilson and 17 others were charged last year with a variety of fraud-related crimes. They allegedly told customers Hood was about to make an offshore bank deal with the potential to earn them 50 times their investment in just nine months.

Fourteen have now admitted varying roles in Omega and conceded, under oath, they pocketed the customers' money instead of investing in any form of bank deal. All have agreed to testify against the remaining defendants at trial.

Wilson pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit mail and wire fraud and conspiracy to commit money laundering. He admitted tracking at least $12.5 million in investors' funds. While saying he does not know whether the offshore bank deal is real, Wilson admitted that no investors got the payoff they were promised.

"Is money available to pay the roll of all the investors?" U.S. District Judge Michael P. McCuskey asked Wilson on Monday.

Champaign man arrested with minor he met on the Internet

MUSKEGON, Mich. (AP) — An Illinois man is accused of arranging a tryst with a 13-year-old girl he met in an Internet chat room, Muskegon County's prosecutor said.

Kenneth Clymer, 21, of Champaign had been talking to the Norton Shores girl in a "love and romance" chat room for several weeks, Muskegon Detective Sgt. Dean Roesler said.

The girl was with Clymer when he was arrested Sunday at a hotel, Roesler said.

Prosecutor Tony Tague said Clymer was charged with two counts of third-degree criminal sexual conduct and with using a computer to commit a felony.

Copies of the 2000-2001 Warbler yearbook will be available for pick up beginning the last week of August.

If graduating seniors, or other students, would like to have a copy of the book delivered to their home residence, they should stop by the Student Publications office located in Buzzard Hall. The cost of shipping is $5 and must be paid before the book will be sent.

Other students can pick up a copy of the book at the Student Publications office anytime between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

All students who were enrolled full time during the span of this yearbook, receive a book as part of their student fees. If others would like a copy, they can purchase one for $30.

The 2000-2001 yearbook is two yearbooks under the same binding with a combined index. The book has a total of 448 pages.

Ryan campaign manager's pal raised funds for favors

CHICAGO (AP) — A longtime friend of Gov. George Ryan's campaign manager admitted Monday that he raised $10,700 in campaign funds in return for low-number license plates and other official favors.

Larry Hall, a witness who has cooperated extensively in the federal government's investigation of bribes paid in return for drivers licenses, also acknowledged keeping some of the money for personal use.

Hall, 44, made the admission in pleading guilty to a mail fraud scheme in which he got $3,300 in payoffs from an Addison contractor to submit phony bids for remodeling projects at drivers licensing centers.

The phony bidding charges had been aired previously and prosecutors had indicated Hall was likely to plead guilty eventually.

Hall, a longtime friend of Ryan

"Not that I'm aware of," said Wilson, who insisted that the money was spent only for refunds to some investors and for Omega partners' "expenses."

Wilson, however, admitted those expenses included Hood paying rent for his residence in Louisville, Ky., and buying him a new $40,000 sport utility vehicle.

Also pleading guilty Monday were former Mattoon police officer Bryan Boes and former Mattoon restaurateur Tommie McKibben, both of whom pleaded guilty to making monetary transactions with proceeds of illegal activity. Both said they used Omega-generated funds to buy new businesses.

Jury selection in the trial of the remaining defendants begins Tuesday at the federal courthouse in Springfield. Opening statements could come as early as Thursday and attorneys on both sides estimate the trial could last up to six weeks. Prosecutors intend to call 70 to 100 witnesses, including Hood.

campaign manager Scott Fawell, introduced a new element in his plea agreement with federal prosecutors, however, acknowledging he had raised campaign funds from favor seekers.

"In total, defendant raised approximately $10,700 in campaign contributions for three political entities, in exchange for the official benefits, including the issuance of low-digit license plates," the plea agreement signed by Hall and federal prosecutors said.

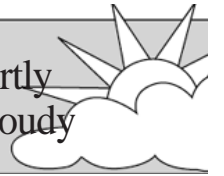

Low-digit license plates are hard to get and most of them are taken, said David Druker, a spokesman for Secretary of State Jesse White. He said that so-called elite plates — with two or three digits — "are traditionally within the purview of the secretary of state to hand out."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Patrick Collins told U.S. District Judge

Blanche M. Manning that two of the "political entities" involved campaigns for Illinois secretary of state but he did not identify them.

Prosecutors have traced $170,000 in bribes paid in exchange for drivers licenses to the Citizens for Ryan campaign fund. Ryan was secretary of state when he ran successfully for governor. A trickle of the bribe money also found its way into the coffers of Republican Secretary of State candidate Al Salvi's campaign, federal officials say.

The plea agreement said the funds were raised "through" an unnamed official in the secretary of state's office, identified by prosecutors only as "SOS official A." Randall Samborn, a spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office, declined to reveal the identity of "SOS official A."

Summer

Abbey Seifert, a junior family and consumer science major, will work at the Women's Health and Resource Center in the Decatur Memorial Hospital as part of her internship.

Kim Stroz, a freshman undecided major, will work at International Travel Services in Deerfield working with data entry and Robin Dancy, a sophomore art history major, will work for Archer Daniels Midland.

Other students, like Doug Fenske, a freshman business management major, know they need money and want to find work, but as of right now, they are not sure what job they will find.

Summer brings with it the opportunity to travel and have fun, too.

Ayala has several activities planned. She said she will go to Seattle for a week at the end of May for a diversity conference with EIUnity. Her sorority, Alpha Sigma Tau, will have an open house for a retreat, and she plans to go camping at the end of the summer.

Smolinski will see another part of the world when she travels to Amsterdam, Paris and London for a 10-day-vacation that is a high school graduation present.

"It's going to be cool because I speak French," she said. "I'll be able to use my language skills."

After a year of school, many students are eager and ready to leave Charleston and go home, but at the same time, students made many friends they don't to leave and learned to like the college life.

"I'm done with school and living with people my age," Rehor said. But she also said she will miss the freedom and Charleston. "It's a different town, a different life."

Fenske said he is excited to have a break.

"(Over summer), you don't have to worry about school work, don't have to worry about finals, any of that," he said.

At the same time, he said he will miss hanging out with the people he has been with since August. Ayala and Smolinski both said they will miss their friends because everyone lives too far away from them.

Stokowski said what he's going to miss the most about Eastern this summer is the people.

"I'm really going to miss the people," Stokowski said. "There's good people here."

Turek said she will miss the extra time she had at Eastern. "Summer means eight-hour-indoor days working," Turek said. "Here you have more freedom."

For another student, the end of this week means the end of her days at Eastern.

"I'm excited to go home, but I'm going to miss it here because this is my last week at Eastern," Britton said. She said she will transfer next year because Eastern does not have her major.

Even though summer is known as a break from classes, some students still will have to open the books and study a little. Alicia Britton will take summer school classes at Richland in Decatur, Turek will take some Internet courses and Dancy will take a chemistry course at her local community college.

Flooded Mississippi slowly retreating

The flooded Mississippi River is slowly starting to retreat back to its banks, but riverside residents in Illinois will have to continue watching their levees for almost a month.

Ron Fournier, spokesman for the Army Corps of Engineers in Rock Island, said Monday that in areas where the river has already receded it is dropping about 2 inches per day. He said rains farther north won't create a secondary crest along Illinois towns but will slow the river's retreat.

"It's just a slow, slow receding of the river," he said. "We won't see a significant drop until around the end of May."

Fournier said the river is expected to drop below flood stage of 15 feet at Moline/Rock Island about May 21.

Riverfront towns in north and central Illinois saw the crest late last week. The river was expected to crest at Grafton, just north of St. Louis, sometime Monday.

Former Grafton Alderman Evelyn Laux said no homes or businesses are threatened, in part because many were moved out of the flood plain after the disastrous 1993 flood.

"We're just watching and waiting," she said.

Swollen by rain and melting snow, the Mississippi is flooding as far north as Minnesota. Damage in Illinois has been minor.

One of last Frank Lloyd Wright home may be demolished

BANNOCKBURN (AP) — One of the last homes built by Frank Lloyd Wright may see the wrecking ball.

A prospective buyer of Wright's Usonian-style ranch home in suburban Bannockburn plans to knock down the historic house and build a handicapped-accessible house on the four-acre lot.

The buyer, who has not been publicly identified, is set to close on the property in the community 26 miles northwest of Chicago on May 11. But neighbors and lawmakers are protesting, saying they are willing to come up with alternate plans and compromises. In one plan, next-door neighbor Carl Witte would sell his home — on a slightly larger lot — to the Wright home's buyer for the same $1.2 million asking price. Witte, a retired architect, said he'd rather see his home demolished than the Wright home.

"The point is, we don't want this (Wright home) being sold to somebody who wants to tear it down," Witte's son Kurt said. "That's ridiculous."

Another plan would be to move the home in pieces to a different location.

It's been more than 20 years since a Wright home was demolished in the United States. Wright's Bannockburn house has particular significance because it may have been his last work. He built it just before he died in 1959.

"We are just amazed that this is a battle we still have to fight," said David

"The point is, we don't want this (Wright home) being sold to somebody who wants to tear it down. That's ridiculous."

Kurt Witte, next door neighbor

Bahlman, executive director of the Landmarks Preservation Council of Illinois. "We thought at least the public appreciation of Frank Lloyd Wright's work would be enough that we wouldn't have to still fight these battles."

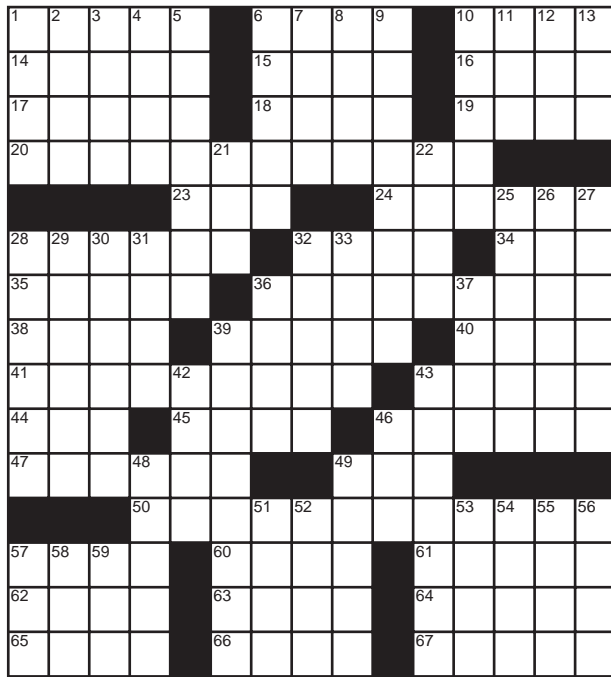

The 3,000 square-foot home was built to be capable of future expansion.

Carol Wyant, acting executive director of the Frank Lloyd Wright Building Conservancy, described the Usonian concept as open, gracious and livable.

Beyond a heavy presence in Oak Park, Wright homes are scattered in Chicago suburbs including Barrington Hills, Batavia, Highland Park, Libertyville, Lake Forest, Elmhurst and Geneva.

Some cities, including Lake Forest and Highland Park, have ordinances that protect homes like those designed by Wright.

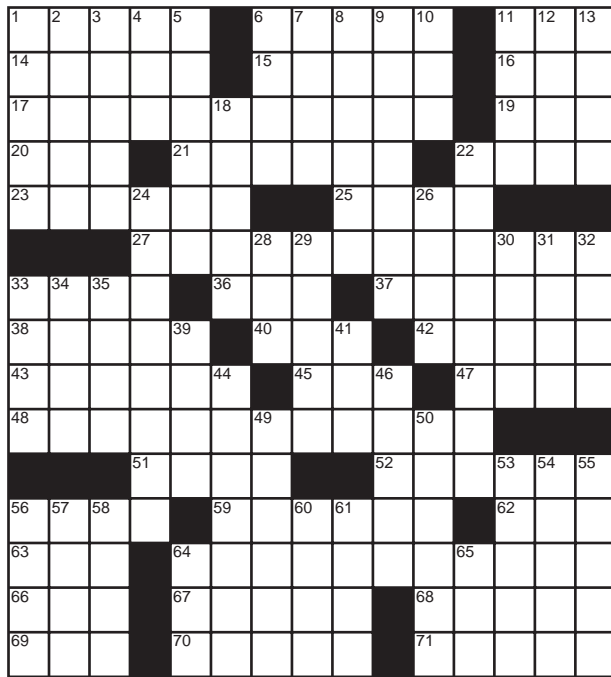

If the Wright home is sold, the Bannockburn architecture review board must approve the plans for the new house before granting a demolition permit.
