Fireworks for the Fourth feature fancy flares

Charleston residents will be able to view a spectacular Fourth of July fireworks display just west of the campus pond.

The display will begin around 9 p.m., according to Joe Berger, who is organizing the display. He said there will be a varied aerial show and ground display, culminating in a blazing finale of 72 bombs.

At 1:15 p.m. Friday, the Heritage Woods Fourth of July parade will be held. Beginning on Williamsburg Circle, the parade will then follow Village Road, along Woodlawn Drive and on to the Heritage Woods swimming pool.

Coles County Speedway will be the site of two days of micro-midget racing beginning Friday and continuing on Saturday. More than 75 cars are expected to compete both days.

Time trials will be held from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Friday. Races begin at 6:30 p.m. Friday. On Saturday, three 100-lap races will be held starting at 6:30 p.m.

Coles County Speedway is located on West Route 316.

Kid's Day will be sponsored by the Kiwanis Club from 8 a.m. to 11 a.m. Friday at Morton Park. Activities include bicycle and tricycle races at 8 a.m. Division Street will be closed to traffic from Lincoln Avenue to Pierce Street for the races.

At 9 a.m., there will be three-legged and sack races. Beginning at 10 a.m., there will a pet show at the west pavillion. Everyone who enters a pet will receive a prize. Frisbee and balloon throws also begin at 10 a.m.

As a part of the Coles County Sesquicentennial celebration, a football game between alumni lettermen of Charleston High School and Mattoon High School will begin at 3 p.m. Saturday at O'Brien Field.

Former Mattoon coach Bill Bess is coaching Mattoon while Eastern coach Chuck Budde will handle the coaching chores for Charleston. Budde has coached Charleston High School for the past seven years and has recently taken a position as an Eastern assistant coach.

BEOG awards cut $50 for all students next fall

by Laura Rzepka

All financial awards which students are expecting to receive from the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant for next fall, will be reduced by $50 instead of the anticipated average reduction of $260, John Flynn, associate director of financial aids, said Tuesday.

The U.S. Congress Monday ironed out the reduction amounts to $50 against the dictates of law which would have reduced each students' award by an average of $260, Flynn said.

"There is specific legislation that says how a reduction should be handled," Flynn said.

On June 25 Flynn received official notification that awards were to be cut by an average of $260 and just five days later, Congress decided to reduce awards by $50.

Although the $50 reduction is not official yet, it is expected to pass, Flynn said. The conference appropriations committee in Washington is currently evaluating the reduction, he added.

The private institutions, whose students also are eligible for BEOG awards, determined that the cut would total $190 million with the $260 reduction, Flynn said.

It is necessary that $140 million and not $190 million be cut from BEOG awards, Flynn added. President Jimmy Carter said on March 14 that it is necessary to "defer $140 million in the BEOG program," he said.

The reductions are an attempt to meet the law which Congress brought upon themselves, Flynn said. "In order to stay within their budget, cuts have to be made," he added.

"Tuition at private schools is so high that students there get awards anyway," Flynn said. Students at Eastern are primarily dependent and come from low middle-income or middle-income families, he added.

"The net effect (of the $260 reduction) is that kids affected by the Middle Income Assistance Act of last year would have their aid reduced more

Faculty skeptical about General Ed revisions

by Laura Fraembs

Proposed revisions in Eastern's general education requirements, currently awaiting approval by Eastern President Daniel E. Marvin, have prompted comments from several faculty members.

The overhaul of the requirements for all students was started by the Council on Academic Affairs in January, 1979. The CAA first approved the revisions package and submitted it to campus examination on March 20 of last semester. After receiving varied reactions, the council gave its final OK to the package on April 17 and passed it onto Marvin.

And now Marvin has received written reactions from several faculty members.

The apparent controversial changes proposed include the addition of an English competency exam for juniors, a foreign language requirement for bachelor of arts candidates and seminars in which seniors would study topics outside of their majors.

The foreign language proposal seems to be a particularly controversial issue, covered in several of the comments sent to Marvin.

Floyd Merritt, chairman of the speech communications department, said department members passed a resolution opposing this requirement, not because they are "philosophically opposed" but because adding foreign language at this time, when university enrollments are decreasing anyway, may cause prospective Eastern students to go elsewhere.

Merritt said speech communications faculty were also concerned that the requirement might cause bachelor of arts candidates already at Eastern to change to a bachelor of science program.

Dean of the School of Fine Arts Vaughn Jaenike agreed with this point, stating that a foreign language requirement "might hurt recruitment" by causing possible students to "look to other universities" where a language is not required.

Jaenike also said he objects to this proposal because students in his departments of art and theater would be overburdened by taking foreign language in addition to all courses required for their majors.

These students would be forced to graduate with more than 120 hours and since this figure is set by the Board of Governors, all students should be able to graduate with it, he said.

"I have nothing against foreign language; I think it's good for them to have it," Jaenike said. "But in these departments, unless we drop some requirements, it would be difficult to

Theatre '80 to stage 'Same Time, Next Year'

by Herb Meeker

"Same Time, Next Year," the story about an adulterous 25-year love affair, will be presented by Eastern's Summer Theatre '80 beginning at 8 p.m., Saturday, in the Playroom of the Doudna Fine Arts Center.

This Bernard Slade play, which first appeared on Broadway in March, 1975, tells the story of an adulterous love affair which takes place only once a year. The two characters help reflect twenty-five years of American morals, manners and attitudes, while trying to mold their own identities.

The play begins in 1951 when George picks up Doris in a California inn, where they both decide to meet there once a year. Despite their yearly weekend encounters from 1951 to 1975, both characters remain happily married, and have children.

At first, George (played by Barry Roberts) is an uptight, neurotic accountant becoming more stuffy and rich by telling other people how to spend their money. He finally gives it all up, goes into analysis, becomes a latter day hippie, and then returns to the establishment.

Doris, played by junior Beth Adams, is a shy married girl, who becomes a young, restless housewife, a college student, over-age flower child, ambitious career woman with a shaky marriage, then finally a satisfied matron.

This play is Robert's "virgin voyage" in theater. Adams has done plays for Eastern's theater company, including "Spoon River Anthology" and "Taming of the Shrew."

Through the affair, the characters cover subjects such as book-of-the-month clubs, impotency, the sexual revolution of the 60's, Vietnam and marriage.

G. E Gabbard, director of the play, said, "This is not a play for the whole family, since there is profanity and mature subjects are covered."

The play will be presented again at 8 p.m. July 7 and 8, and matinees at 2 p.m. on July 6 and 12.

Tickets are $3.50 for adults, $2.50 for senior citizens and $2.00 for Eastern students. Reservations can be made by calling 581-3110 between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m.

Outlook for Voelz campaign 'very favorable'

by Jerry Fallstrom

The outlook for Democrat Pete Voelz' campaign to unseat Republican 2nd District congressman Dan Crane is "very favorable," the Eastern Journalism instructor said recently.

"We've had a good response throughout the district," Voelz said. "When you are fighting a half million dollars, it's an uphill battle." Voelz said Crane's campaign resources are larger than his by 5 to 1.

The bulk of Crane's campaign contributions come from outside the district, and oil companies comprise much of these funds, he said.

Voelz ran as a write-in candidate for Democratic nomination in the March 18 primary and totaled 275 votes.

Voelz said Crane's hardline support among voters numbers about 20 percent.

"Crane has to make up the other 31 percent by fooling them with slick campaign tactics," he said.

Voelz said he does not underestimate the districts' voters.

"The American electorate is very intelligent. They know the issues and watch the candidates. In the end, they will buy my message and not his (Crane's). Voters will not let him buy their vote," he said.

A primary issue in the campaign for this district is the production of gasohol, Voelz said.

"Gasohol is one of the keys to energy independence. It is a lynchpin to three major problems facing the country; the economy, energy and foreign policy.

"All of these problems hang on oil imports. We can beat inflation by becoming energy independent. Crane is against his own district in this regard. He has voted against federal aid to boost production of gasohol."

Voelz said Crane is taking orders from the oil companies against the best interests of his district by voting to put a federal tax on gasohol.

"Crane represents the sunbelt, oil companies, and millionaires in southern California," he said.

Another issue in the campaign, Voelz said, is one of leadership. "People want to know that their leaders aren't extremists," he said. Voelz characterized Crane as a man who is not what he claims to be.

"Crane tries to sell himself as a normal conservative, which he is not." Crane's message is simplistic, negative and intolerant, he said.

The rigors of the campaign trail have taken their toll on Voelz.

"I have lost 20 pounds and I'm working about 18 hours a day. I have found that when I am on the go, I start to think about the campaign as soon as I wake up in the morning," he said.

Voelz has been granted a leave of absence from his teaching position for the fall semester in order to concentrate on campaigning full time.

Voelz met with President Carter and other White House staff members in February in a series of briefings. He said his support of Carter will not be a liability to his campaign.

"Anytime you have an incumbent president, that is not a liability. Carter is a terrific campaigner and he hasn't really started yet. Besides, Reagan will put his foot in his mouth and hurt himself."

"If the news media does its job, Voelz said, there will be no doubt in voters' minds as to who is the better man for the job.

"If the media do their job and explore the candidates and the issues, then I'll win," Voelz said.

"He (Crane) is running scared. He knows if I can bring the truth out, he'll lose."

IAB approves $530,000 athletic budget for FY 81

by Herb Meeker

The Intercollegiate Athletic Board approved a $530,000 athletic budget Monday, as submitted by Eastern's new athletic director R. C. Johnson

Johnson announced to the board his department would not allow any further spending on athletics unless approved in writing by himself. Ron Paap, assistant athletic director or Joan Schmidt, associate athletic director.

Johnson added he was trying to "retire the $100,000 deficit" which was inherited from last year. He said his department has tried to take a realistic look at the finances and has asked each coach to submit "trimmed" budgetary needs.

Johnson said despite cutting out unnecessary items from the budget and the fact the students will be paying $244,000 as opposed to $162,000, the athletic budget is tight.

Johnson said the football and basketball programs have come up short on their budgets due to cuts in scholarships.

"We have cut all the expenditures from the athletic programs, which have anything to do with the playing of each game or event, such as field maintenance and concessions," Johnson said.

Johnson said "I'm concerned about the football and basketball programs, because they feed the others."

Louis Coon, IAB faculty chairman, asked Johnson if the funds received from the student referendum last year would be distributed 60 percent for the men's programs and 40 percent for the women's.

"If we distributed 60-40 across the board for the men and women, then we would need to cut certain programs," Johnson said.

Coon said "There is a possibility that a court case could be filed, if the referendum funds aren't distributed on a 60-40 basis."

Revisions package needs action

It has been nearly 18 months since the Council on Academic Affairs began working on the revision of Eastern's general education requirements.

Unfortunately, it seems a few more months will pass until the revisions are finally passed or voted down by Eastern President Daniel E. Marvin.

General education requirements (all-university requirements) affect all Eastern students regardless of their major. They require students to take certain courses in order to graduate.

In spring, 1979, the CAA surveyed the faculty and students on the question of revising the university academic requirements. The council then drew up a preliminary revisions package, which it completed in May.

Then in September of that year came the start of a meticulous process. Each revision proposal, whether new or old, was discussed and evaluated by the CAA with feedback from each department that was affected.

By March 20 of this year, the CAA had approved tentatively each revision proposal. Then it heard feedback from all parties concerned. The CAA then approved the "revised" general education revisions.

The revisions landed on Marvin's desk in April. For the time being, it appears the package will remain there.

Marvin said the reason for delaying his approval for the general education revisions is his work with the budgets. Another is the fact that the requirements, even if passed by Marvin and the Board of Governors, could not go into effect until fall 1981 at the earliest.

Another reason for Marvin's delay may be the recent rush of criticism against the requirements, which include a writing competency exam and senior seminars for all students plus a foreign language requirement for all bachelor of arts degree candidates.

Individual complaints have come from faculty in speech communications, chemistry, health, physical education and recreation, home economics, English, fine arts, education and political science.

Many of the complaints go against the inflating of hours caused by the additional requirements in the revisions, the possible damage to Eastern's recruitment by the foreign language requirement and problems with implementing an effective writing competency exam.

These concerns were evaluated by the CAA prior to March 20. However, Marvin should consider these issues and look over the facts from both sides to find the impact the requirements will have on each major and department and the effect on future recruitment of students to Eastern.

Some complaints made by the faculty are unsubstantiated. The CAA has not "railroaded" the revisions through the council despite claims otherwise by faculty. The CAA gave plenty of opportunity to faculty to comment on the revisions.

This is not an "arts and sciences" general education revisions package, despite the fact that most of the faculty CAA members teach in the arts and sciences discipline. The CAA showed concern for all disciplines in its revision process.

We encourage President Marvin to take the revisions off the table. In the spring he said the revisions would be evaluated this summer.

Will similar statements be made about the requirements this fall?

Marvin should evaluate the requirements this summer, not at some tentative date in the future. The approval process has been delayed long enough.

Dictionary may become trivia collectors' item

Perhaps the most embarrassing moment for the Chicago Tribune occurred on election night 1948, when the paper ran a headline prematurely proclaiming "Dewey Defeats Truman."

Of course, students of history know that despite the Tribune's wishes otherwise, Harry Truman came from behind and defeated Thomas E. Dewey for the presidency.

Ever since, newspapers have waited for a noticeable trend in the election results before declaring a winner. Or newspapers will run sheepish but safe headlined stories such as "Carter Lead Appears Insurmountable," determined not to make the Tribune's mistake.

If you think the Tribune was brash and irresponsible for its little 1948 foray into clairvoyance, the news last week that the next edition of the New Webster Encyclopedic Dictionary has already listed a presidential winner for 1980 was surprising.

The dictionary has listed one Ronald Wilson Reagan as the nation's 40th president. The publishers, Outlet Book Co. of New York, rubbed their crystal ball and saw a vision of the eminent former B-movie actor.

Apparently the publishers could not get a clear image of Reagan's vice-president, because the slot for the number two job is left blank. Or else they decided to leave something to create media interest at the Republican Convention.

The dictionary is due out in July and there are 50,000 copies already printed.

I hope their vision of President Reagan was a clear one for the publishers' sake. Because if the vision was muddled and the image mistaken, then plenty of trivia collectors are going to be mighty happy. And Webster's reputation will be dirtied.

Surely Reagan's forecast victory cannot come true. After all, the Tribune missed their infamous prediction, after attempting to look just a few hours down the road.

The New Webster publishers have concluded in late June, four months before the Nov. 4 election, that Ronald Reagan will lead America in the 1980s.

That prediction is fine with me. As one who is always looking for an opportunity to collect such trivia, this one is a piece of cake.

Most opportunities for collecting this sort of history-making memorabilia take quick and decisive thinking in perceiving potential collectors items. I regret that I did not fly to Memphis and buy a load of local newspapers reporting Elvis Presley's 1976 death. I wished I had done so after I read about distraught Elvis admirers buying copies of the papers for $20 or more.

Jerry

By the time I thought of it, it was too late. More than a year too late.

Oh, well. This time I am not going to be left behind. I have consulted my

Reagan already 'official'

NEW YORK (UPI) — Pollsters may not know who the next U.S. president will be, but the New Webster Encyclopedic Dictionary does.

In a printing due out in July, Ronald Wilson Reagan is listed as the 40th president.

"My face is a little red," said Alan Mirken, president of Outlet Book Co., publisher of the dictionary.

"Apparently it got printed that way. We hadn't intended it."

A proof of the dictionary page listing presidents of the United States has Reagan as number 40, although the vice presidential slot is left blank.

"Originally the new 1980 printing was due out after the election," Mirken said.

"We thought Reagan was the logical choice and filled in that line with his name, with the idea of not going to press until after the election."

He said the same procedure was used in 1976.

However, dictionary sales exceeded expectation, and the printing date was moved up, resulting in the Reagan oversight.

"At least the picture of Reagan was pulled," he said.

"Now we have to make the decision of what to do. Probably we will have to go ahead with the page as it is. There are 50,000 copies printed. We can't just eat that up."

own tarot cards and discovered Ronald Reagan will be consoling himself in defeat at his California ranch one year from now.

I am sure many collectors of trivia who will never look up the spelling of a word will be lining up to purchase the New Webster.

Some will use the dictionary purchase as a hedge against inflation, hoping to cash in on its notoriety at a later date. After the election proves the New Webster wrong in its prediction, the market for such a printed monumental gaffe will be large.

Others will purchase the New Webster to use as a conversation piece. The New Webster is destined to become standard coffee table material.

There also will be oddballs who will buy the New Webster because of perceived ideological agreement with the publishers. Republicans will buy the New Webster out of a sense of party loyalty.

Conversely, Carter, Anderson, and Gus Hall supporters will feel insulted that a respectable dictionary would predict sane Americans to elect Ronald Reagan.

But that probably won't stop anti-Reaganites from buying the dictionary. Because, as loyal followers and true believers, supporters will relish the thought of snickering when their candidate wins.

And proves the dictionary to be a worse forecaster than the Tribune.

Like a two-headed Lincoln penny, the 1980 New Webster is destined to go down in history as a freak of mankind.

Hold back a couple of copies for me. I intend to have a hearty laugh Nov. 5.

4th of July '80— a time for reflection

Friday is Independence Day, the Fourth of July. A day to celebrate the independence of our nation.

This year's celebration should be tempered a bit with a thought of the 53 Americans being held hostage in the American embassy in Iran.

While we Americans all over the country relax, travel, and enjoy the three-day holiday, we should keep in mind the injustice being done to some of our fellow Americans.

Many times in our nation's past has the 4th not been a cause for completely joyful celebration. Throughout our history there have been trying times, times of war, times of depression, times of racial unrest. But throughout it all, Independence Day has remained a constant in our society.

Flags will be flown proudly all over the land as the citizens of the United States publicly show patriotism.

Parades and fireworks are two features usually associated with the 4th of July. Like most holidays, the real meaning of the day tends to get lost amidst the hoopla and the commercialism. Many stores take advantage of the situation to have mid-summer 'Firecracker Sales!', and such. Not much can be done to prevent this type of hype, however this year in particular Americans should make a special effort to get involved with the true spirit of the holiday and show how much they love their country. The world situation, particularly in Iran, shows how easy life in America is.

Here in Coles County, the 150th year Sesquicentennial celebration is a good example of how to show civic and community pride.

Numerous events, such as the traditional fireworks are scheduled, along with special events such as an Alumni football game between Charleston and Mattoon High Schools, a parade, and a special Kid's Day in the park to celebrate the anniversary.

Celebrations such as this are a fine way to celebrate such anniversaries. It allows the entire community to become involved in numerous activities. And, combined with the traditional 4th of July celebration, this shapes to be a big weekend in Coles County.

Independence Day, 1980 should be a time for all Americans to remember how our independence was attained and think of how much we value our freedom, and to think of those who are not so lucky to have that freedom.

How housing can solve its waiting list dilemma

"The Waiting List." It's an overused euphemism employed by doctors' offices, department stores, libraries and yes, even universities, which means, in effect, "Sorry, you blew it bud—see ya."

It indicates failure of some sort regardless of whether the actual waiting list is short-term or long-term. You didn't get up early enough, you weren't quick enough, you applied too late. It creates feelings of anger, frustration, disgust and often hopelessness.

Case in point: The 1,200 new students expected at Eastern in the fall who are currently on the waiting list for a dorm room. Each year it's the same thing. There's only room for so many students in the halls, yet each year there's more of a demand for rooms than the year before. The dreaded waiting list begins forming sometime early in February and with the addition of each name, the growing list indicates the failure of the university to foresee demand for housing and the failure of students to apply early enough to insure a spot in those precious, non-luxurious home-away-from-home residences.

Granted, building a new hall might not be the answer when you consider the long-term costs involved and the predicted decline in enrollments at universities throughout the country in the next ten years. And there is the small consideration that a hall that might have eliminated much of the "waiting list" for a few years, would become a ghost hall located somewhere in the heart of the south quad. Well now maybe that wouldn't be so bad. It would be a nice conversation piece which would be a real advantage at Halloween. It could even be turned into a tourist attraction. "Live out your most terrifying fantasies at ghost hall, the newest idea in horror crazes."

A short-term solution to the housing crunch could be a kind of south quad revival, which would ultimately be the result of pitching one huge tent in the middle of the quad and sectioning off space for "suites" inside. This would definitely be a low-cost solution since plumbing and electrical problems would be at a minimum, namely zero.

Another low-cost solution which would be a slight modification from the university's current policy of sticking five people in quads and four in triples, would put a third person in a double. All of which somehow sounds like a card game. "No trump you say? Sorry but we'll have to put you in an overflow room."

Three persons in a double room could easily be arranged, if one of the roommates prefers sleeping on the desk, hanging from a handy hook on the ceiling usually meant only for plants (kind of like Mork) or slumbering in quarters other than his own anyway.

As you can see, the dilemmas presented by "The Waiting List" for housing are capable of being resolved. It's just a matter of a little ingenuity.

David Ebdon, chairman of the chemistry department, sent Marvin one of the few letters supportive of the foreign language requirement. "As a people, we tend to be insular and it's a means of opening us up culturally," he said.

However, Ebdon said he appreciates the problem mentioned by Jaenike. "I wouldn't like any requirement that diminishes a major, so perhaps this proposal should be adjusted in certain circumstances."

Diminishing majors by adding extra hours in general education was one of the biggest complaints received by Marvin and it was voiced mainly by faculty in professional degree areas such as education.

Walter Lowell, dean of the School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, said, "They've cranked in too many hours, way too many."

He said the problem for professional degree candidates is that they cannot "double count" the specific courses which would be required — using them to fulfill both general education and major requirements — as students in liberal arts programs can.

The revised general education requirements would add 38 to 58 required hours, Lowell said, "which is OK if you're getting a BA or BS, period." But because students in programs such as education cannot double count most of these hours, "they're forcing certain degrees to do more."

Dorothy Hart of the physical education department agrees with Lowell. "I generally felt that the number of hours would be detrimental to other objectives" such as working toward a minor or double major.

Dean of the School of Home Economics Mary Ruth Swope said, "The whole philosophy between professional education should be different from liberal arts education," and thus professional programs such as home economics should not be subject to the revised general education requirements.

She said when these requirements "become too voluminous," it's impossible to fully educate students in a specialized professional degree program.

And if these programs "put out people who can't produce in entry-level jobs, your program dies on the vine," she added.

The proposed English exam is another issue which Marvin received

Lowell said he believes "English teachers should do that job in 1001 and 1002," the two courses in composition and literature which are already part of the general education package.

However, Ted Ivarie, dean of the School of Business, said business departments are seeking ways to improve the "communication skills" of their majors and this exam would be one way of doing so.

"But I'm not sure I'm ready to make a whole-hearted endorsement of the method," he added, because of possible problems with implementing and administering a written exam such as the one proposed.

The proposed senior seminars — which would consist of two one-hour courses to be taken in areas outside of the student's major — received mainly negative comments from those faculty members contacted.

"The idea is laudable, but it won't work," Ebdon said.

Students tend to put time into their courses in relation to the amount of credit received and as one-hour courses, "they won't be respected; there won't be enough to get your teeth into," he said.

Larry Thorsen, chairman of the political science department, said since the seminars would cover topics outside of a student's major, the student would have no interest and would consequently learn little.

Ivarie said the seminars "need to be looked at carefully" because of problems in implementing them. They would take additional faculty and classroom space, which are "scarce elements now in the School of Business," he said.

The lack of facilities and faculty was also noted by Merritt as a possible objection to the entire general education revisions package. "We need more staff now for the current requirements and if we can't staff these, perhaps we shouldn't add more," he said.

Marvin's decision on adding more has been delayed, as he had originally planned to take a decision on the general education revisions to the CAA by June 15.

He has appointed two committees — one of deans and one of department chairmen — to advise him on the decision.

Marvin said recently one reason he delayed his decision is because he is "literally swamped with budgets. They (the requirements) wouldn't be effective until fiscal year 1981 anyway."

If Marvin does approve the revisions, they still must go before the Board of Governors for approval before they are finally put into effect.

City budget placed on file, Lincoln Plaza approved

by Jerry Fallstrom

The Charleston City Council placed on file for public inspection the proposed 1980-81 city budget, as yet to be finalized, in action Tuesday night. The council also approved an ordinance amending zoning to allow the Lincoln Plaza shopping complex to be built at 14th St. and Lincoln Avenue. Council members agreed to hold a special meeting at noon next Tuesday. The budget is expected to be finalized at that time.

"There are still some changes to be made in a couple of departments," Mayor Robert Hickman said. The council first met to discuss the budget in a special meeting Saturday morning. The 1980-81 fiscal year began June 1.

The Lincoln Plaza complex will be home for a K-Mart department store.

Normal council procedure was waived and the ordinance was approved unanimously.

Site plans for the Lincoln Plaza were accepted by the Charleston zoning board Thursday. A request to change the zoning from multi-family residential to general commercial by the land owners, Charleston Associates, was also approved at the board's meeting.

A planned development of 10 doctors' offices to be constructed by Dr. L. E. McNeill was accepted after the council waived normal procedure. The development will be built on 10.5 acres just east of Sarah Bush Lincoln Health Center.

In other action, the council approved a resolution allocating motor fuel tax funds for improvements to Route 130. The improvements include widening curbs and gutters and sidewalk resurfacing from 18th Street and Route 130 from Lincoln Avenue to Madison Avenue.

Also placed on file for public inspection was an ordinance which would require the removal of a total of 253 feet of parking space south of the intersection of Lincoln Avenue and Seventh Street.

A resolution authorizing bids for resurfacing of Harrison Avenue from Route 130 to 22nd Street was approved and placed on file.

so," Flynn said. With the $50 reduction, all students who receive BEOG awards will have their aid cut, he added.

"I'd rather see the $50 cut. Percentage-wise, the students are still getting hit less," Flynn said.

In other financial aid assistance affecting students, Flynn is more concerned with the Illinois State Scholarship Commission than with the BEOG.

"I'm more worried about the ISSC on the state level," Flynn said. There is not enough money to fund the ISSC on a "rolling deadline basis," Flynn added.

ISSC requested $92 million for next year but Gov. James Thompson cut that request to $85.8 million, Flynn said.

The ISSC wanted to allow students who attend private institutions to be eligible for up to $2,000 but Thompson reduced that to $1,900, Flynn said. The ISSC awards will still cover tuition and fees at public institutions, he added.

Flynn said the commission will have to consider their options with the money they have. Options include designating a cut-off date for applications, reducing the amount of each award, or increasing the self-help figures, Flynn said.

The self-help figure determines how much money the student is expected to contribute from other sources.

The commission meets July 21 with about 80,000 announced awards already facing them, Flynn said. "The ISSC should have addressed this a long time ago," he said.

Streamlining reduces number of judicial boards

by Marsha Hausser

A streamlining of Eastern's court system will begin this fall when the number of judicial boards is reduced from four to two, Glenn Williams, vice president for student affairs, said Tuesday.

The change came following recommendations to the Board of Governors that the system be reorganized for more prompt and efficient judicial action by Williams in consultation with Keith Kohanzo, judicial hearing officer, and advisers and student members of the previous judicial boards.

The BOG approved the change at its June meeting.

Paul Martin, Stevenson Tower counselor representing Kohanzo this summer, said under the new system, with two fewer courts and more justices on each court, judicial action can be taken quicker because it will be easier to obtain a quorum (five justices), which has been a problem in the past.

"I'm very sensitive to this issue," Williams said. "Justice delayed is justice denied. That's one of the problems with state courts."

He said with the two-court system he does not foresee any delay in quick judicial action and noted that students have a right to expect it, to insure both a fair hearing and to protect all students from offenders.

Williams said the dependability of students on the board is an important aspect of the judicial boards which the new system will help improve. Previously, lack of adequate training and a slower process of adjudication have plagued the boards.

Williams said when the court system was first introduced at Eastern in 1970, it took an entire school year to finally get justices placed on the boards with problems of justices not showing up for hearings abound.

To resolve those problems, Kohanzo will have more time to devote to working with members of and candidates for each judicial board.

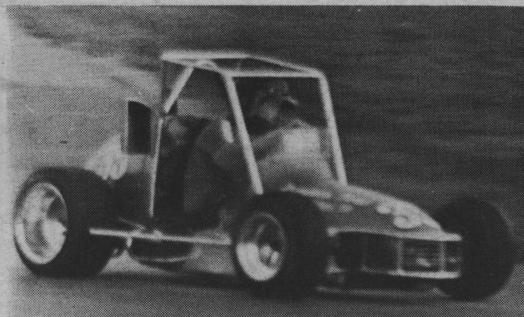

"He will pick out a typical afternoon and case load and explain to students what they'll be expected to do," the vice president said. "He's wide open to discuss the system."

With candidates being interviewed by Kohanzo to insure that they are aware of the time demands involved in being a justice, Williams said he hopes there will be fewer justices vacating their positions because they did not know how much time and work was required by the job.

Williams said before a judicial hearing officer was appointed, "no one felt it was their job to work with these people."

The two boards will be divided into the North Student Judicial Board, made up of justices from the LSD complex, the Triad, Pemberton and Taylor halls and the South Student Judicial Board, made up of justices from Andrews, Lawson, Carman Thomas and East halls.

'Back then' preserved at Greenwood Museum

by Vicki Shaw

Have you ever heard a statement like, "When I was your age, I had to walk two miles to and from school, regardless of the weather?"

All of us have heard a similar statement at one time or another, either from our parents, grandparents or assorted relatives and friends. The comments all boil down to the fact it is not easier going to school now than it was "back then."

Greenwood School Museum, located at 800 Hayes, just north of Buzzard Education Building, gives us a chance to examine "back then" a little closer. The school was first built south of the intersection of Route 16 and Route 49, about 2 miles east of Ashmore, somewhere between the years of 1856 and 1862. Not much is known about the early years of the school, except it averaged around 40 pupils a year, according to David Maurer of the history department.

On April 30, 1895, an election was held and with a vote of 20 to 4, it was decided to build a new school to replace the old one, which was in disrepair, Maurer said.

A new school, 36 feet by 24 feet, was built on the same site as the old one for a total of $1,039. On Sept. 23, 1895, school officially began in the new building.

Maurer mentioned several comments he had heard about Greenwood School from previous students. One lady who attended the school from 1907 to 1913, said the wooden floor had to be oiled once in a while to keep the dust down. The walls were covered with wallpaper and the building was warmed by a cast-iron stove. The ceiling was blue, somewhat unique for a one room schoolhouse.)

Maurer said a man who attended the school from 1913 to 1914 said the teacher flogged the pants off kids who got in trouble. There were separate privies for boys and girls and lunches which were brought from home consisted of sandwiches, cookies and fresh or dried fruit.

Maurer said Joe Fender, a previous student and teacher at the school, also wrote a book on his experiences. The students usually had a spelling bee on Friday afternoon. If a person missed more than two words on a spelling test, he had to put his palm on the teacher's desk and get it whipped with a ruler, Maurer said.

Parents and friends were invited to special Christmas programs. On the last day of school there was a picnic which included students and parents, Maurer said.

An exam was given in every subject every four weeks beginning in the second grade, Maurer said. Subjects included reading, writing, arithmetic, spelling, geography and history. Classes met from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. each day, he said.

Sometimes in the morning session the class would have a 10 to 15 minute session on morals and manners, Maurer said.

Mildred Hofacker, president of the Coles County Historical Society, said the school closed down in 1948. In 1974 plans were made to move the school to its present location.

Maurer said the building is furnished with authentic pieces of the mid-1800s, with only a few pieces actually coming from the original school.

The Greenwood School Museum is now used to exhibit displays by the Coles County Historical Society and is used by the group as a meeting room.

The society sponsors two major exhibits at the museum each year, Maurer said. One is at Christmas time and one is in the spring.

He said last spring's exhibit consisted of a selection of Coles County quilts made and used over the last 100 years.

Hofacker said because of the Sesquicentennial celebration, the society is putting on more exhibits this year. Each weekend there will be a different exhibit comparing art work from the past to the present. This weekend's exhibition will feature the history of Illinois commemorating the Fourth of July.

Hofacker said since this is an election year there will also be an exhibit this fall displaying election memorabilia.

Greenwood School Museum, at 800 Hayes St., is used to exhibit displays by the Coles County Historical Society. This weekend's exhibit will feature a Fourth of July theme. The original school was built between 1856 and 1862. The current school was built in 1895 at a cost of $1,039. (News photos by Robin Scholz)

Panther free agents confident of spot in NFL

by Vickie Woodbury

James Warring feels he has a chance to make a National Football League team this summer. After all, he helped Eastern to the NCAA Division II title in 1978.

"After three days of mini-camp, I feel good about my chances," Warring said. "People questioned my speed because I was timed in 4.9 seconds for 40 yards near the end of last season. The Oakland scout said he knew I was faster than that. And I ran a 4.7 out there last month."

The 22-year-old Miami, Fla., resident who compiled career totals of 109 catches, 1,555 yards and a school record 22 touchdowns admitted it was "a shock when I wasn't drafted. It hurt for a while, but it made me more determined."

To ready himself for the return trip to the west coast Warring said, "I'm working on my speed and on technique, little things like leaning forward during a cut and making certain moves. I've got to get used to coming out of a two-point stance after using a three-point stance in college."

During camp Warring said he saw that he had a lot more experience than some of the other rookies.

"They had an eighth-round draft choice among the receivers at rookie camp and he has speed. But I can see I had more experience than a lot of them, since I got a lot of double-coverage and had to do things like roll up against a zone. And I had the experience of playing in rain," Warring said.

can throw. It's a matter of my learning their plays.

Others who joined Turk at the mini-camp held at St. Norbert College were veterans Dave Whitehurst, Lynn Dickey and Randy Hedberg, formerly with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Even with the veterans in camp, Turk said, "the coaches don't give

Last season Turk passed for 1,288 yards and 11 touchdowns giving him two-year totals of 268 completions for 3,711 yards and a school-record 36 touchdowns in 537 attempts.

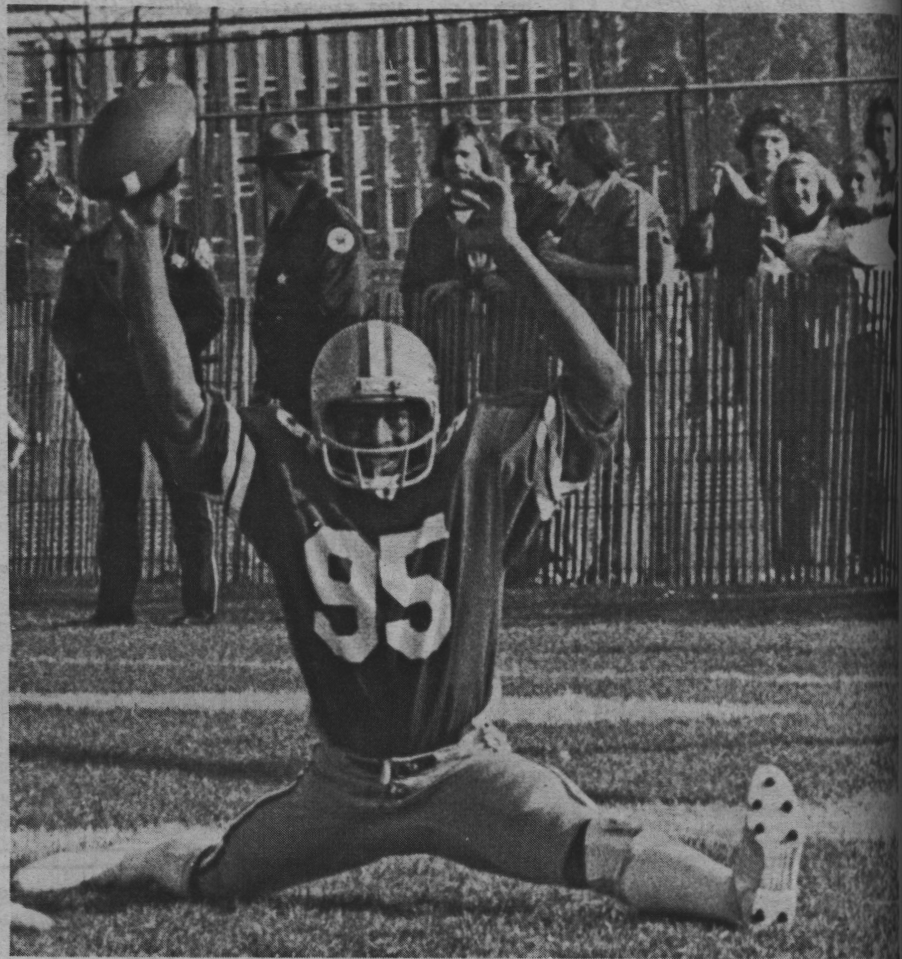

Turk felt nearly the same as Warring when he did not get picked in the NFL draft.

"I was pretty demoralized at not being drafted. If the Packers hadn't called three to four days after that, I would have called some teams, though I don't know whom. If I don't make it in Green Bay, I'll try somewhere else."

The Morris High School product is "throwing every day" as he looks toward July 12 rookie camp.

Basketball coaching candidates all top quality

Eastern is in the process of making a big decision. The decision facing a six-member search committee is who to pick to be the next head basketball coach.

The list of candidates was narrowed to four and the announcement of the choice comes Tuesday afternoon. Then we will learn who will be Don Eddy's successor.

A lot of people were worried when Eddy left. Who could Eastern get that could continue to keep Eastern basketball at the high level that we know it now? The four final candidates have eased everyone's mind.

With Don Garner, Jene Davis, Randy Coonce and Rick Samuels, there are four outstanding candidates to choose from. I personally would be happy with any of the four.

New Eastern Athletic Director R.C. Johnson and the search committee are to be commended on the top-notch people they have gotten as candidates.

Brad Patterson

Garner has been an assistant at Missouri for three years. Garner has worked in a fine system under Norm Stewart at Mizzou and has been in charge of recruiting for the Tigers. Garner was primarily responsible for getting high school All-American Steve Stepanovich to enroll at Missouri. If he is that good of a recruiter, Eastern should be able to rise at least to Division I respectability under him.

Davis is Bobby Knight's top assistant at Indiana. That is big time! He has been at IU for two seasons, and before that he was a top high school coach in Ohio. Anyone who has coached under Bobby Knight and has been acclimated to Big 10 basketball would be a prize catch for Eastern.

Samuels also has one big attribute. Although he came from a so-so program at Iowa State, he acted as co-coach for the Cyclones this past season. So he has been exposed to the game pressures that face a head coach concerning substitutions, strategy, etc.

All four appear as they would be impressive additions to the Eastern athletic department. On paper anyway. Of course the real test will come next December when the action starts for real.

The real point is how far Eastern athletics has come in the last few years. Can you imagine an Indiana University assistant being interested in the Eastern job six years ago?

The excitement generated at Eastern basketball games, the overall athletic success, the school itself and the uplifting of the program into Division I are all the reasons why people of the caliber are interested in the head coaching post.

The choice will be made public Tuesday. I don't see how the search committee can be wrong with whomever they choose.
