University to discuss programs

by Pam Lill

Although Eastern does not have a foreign language requirement, many Illinois public universities do require some kind of foreign language in their admission or undergraduate requirements.

Eastern's Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee will vote Monday on whether to require students in the College of Arts and Sciences to complete two semesters of a foreign language before graduation.

Most of the state institutions require foreign language study as a graduation requirement. However, the University of Illinois also requires it for admission to the school.

Roger Applebee, associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, said recently that the U of I's College of Liberal Arts and Sciences requires two years of a high school foreign language for admission into the college.

Once enrolled, the student must take four college semesters of a foreign language, Applebee noted.

Applebee said this requirement affects approximately 43 percent of the undergraduate population.

However, at Illinois State University, the foreign language requirement is not part of admission standards, Jeff Chinn, assistant provost for Undergraduate Instruction at ISU, said.

Students "can get in without it," Chinn said, but it is recommended that they have two years of high school study.

In addition, students choosing a bachelor of arts degree must fulfill a university-wide requirement of three semesters, or an equivalent, of a foreign language, Chinn said.

He added that students not wishing to take a foreign language may choose to work toward a bachelor of science degree.

Chinn said he is "certain the requirement is a factor in students choosing to take a bachelor of science degree."

Northern Illinois University also has a foreign language requirement for students seeking a bachelor of arts degree.

Sue Doederlein, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Northern, said students at Northern are required to take two years of college study in a foreign language.

Western Illinois University does not have a university-wide foreign language requirement, however, there are some bachelor of science majors which call for foreign language study for graduation.

Robert Druen, chairman of the foreign language department at Western, said that one hour of a foreign language is required for a bachelor of science degree in biology and chemistry, Druen said.

Chemistry majors need this requirement for certification by the American Chemistry Society, he added.

Revised version of tailgating proposal given to student organizations for input

by Diane Schneidman

A revised version of John Cole's tailgate policy proposal is currently being reviewed by student organizations for input.

Senator Ken Sjorslev said the proposal is being presented to student organizations for approval before it is presented to the administration for consideration.

Some changes have been made in the proposal originally submitted by Cole, he said.

In addition, Sjorslev said the proposal may still change, depending on the feedback he receives from the groups which will still review the policy.

The amended proposal states the purpose of tailgate parties and sets guidelines for the parties.

Sjorslev said, "The purpose of the tailgaters is to get students into the spirit of the game. Under the former policy (last fall's which placed no time restrictions on tailgating activities), some students were doing more tailgating than cheering."

The amended form of Cole's proposal calls for tailgating to be allowed from 10:15 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. In addition, tailgating will be permitted after half-time until the end of the game.

WELH to host open house to celebrate anniversary

by Dawn Stultz

In observance of more than 20 years of radio entertainment, Eastern's campus radio station WELH will host an open house Saturday.

Nancy Scovie, WELH public relations director, said, "A lot of Eastern students are not really aware of what the station is all about."

The station's roots can be traced back to 1962 in East Lincoln Hall, where six students used homemade equipment to transmit signals throughout the residence hall.

Hence, the official call letters WELH.

The students gained permission to broadcast across campus and, in 1963, WELH was granted $3,000 for the purchase of new equipment.

Five years later, WELH acquired a studio in Coleman Hall featuring modern facilities, more space and better equipment.

Dan Pedersen, current station manager at WELH, said recently, "In the past four years, the major change has been a switch from the original carrier-current—which transmitted the signal through telephone wires to just those living on campus—to cable-transmitted signals to any of those customers receiving cable."

Further information about the station's past, present and future will be available Saturday. Scovie said the open house is being offered to provide information about the station and its facilities, she said.

The WELH executive staff will offer tours of the studio and information about the station during the event, she noted.

Refreshments will be served and several area businesses have donated items to be given away as door prizes, she said.

The WELH open house will be from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Saturday in Coleman Hall room 118.

The proposal also limits the quantity of beer permitted. Sjorslev said that student organizations will be allowed to have three kegs and individual cars may have one keg.

However, beer cannot be sold and no underaged drinking will be permitted, he added.

To ensure enforcement of these guidelines, a tailgate crew consisting of individual student organizations will be available at the games, he added.

These crews will also be responsible for clean-up at the end of the game, he said.

Under Cole's original proposal, a $10 registration fee would have been required from students tailgating. However, this section has been removed from the proposal because student organizations objected to it.

Sjorslev said he showed the proposal to Glenn Williams, vice president for student affairs Thursday. However, Williams said Thursday that at that point he had no reaction to the proposal.

Sjorslev said he hopes the policy will be approved within a month. However, he said, "We've got time since the policy won't go into effect until fall. We want to make a policy that the students and administration are going to like."

'Images' talk to cap off lecture series

by Jay Hagberg

New images and realities in continuing education will be the topic of a lecture presented Sunday by Carol Holden, director of Eastern's continuing education program.

Holden said she will address new developments in education, including both classroom and non-classroom programs.

Bringing Eastern up to date with new developments in computer and math seminars and guest lecturers will also be a part of the lecture, Holden said.

The lecture is the last in a series sponsored by the American Association of University Professors and is scheduled for 2 p.m. Sunday in the Booth Library Lecture Hall. Admission is free to the public.

Goal of event designed to develop awareness of past

(Editor's note: The following story is the second-part of a five-part series highlighting women and their significant accomplishments during Women's History and Awareness Month. This story offers some explanations of the month and what it attempts to accomplish.)

by Debra Klauer

"Women's History and Awareness Month is designed to recognize women's accomplishments and achievements throughout history," Melanie Rawlins, chairman of Eastern's Womens Studies Council, said.

Other women on Eastern's campus who are actively involved with Women's History and Awareness Month activities offered thoughts about the month's meaning.

Lucy Gabbard, program chairman of Eastern's Women's Studies Council, defined the month as "a time to raise the consciousness about women's place in history."

Isabel Parrott, a former three-year student representative of the Women's Studies Council, said, "Women's

Women's History Month

History and Awareness month is a month devoted to women's past accomplishments and successes as well as celebrating current and future accomplishments."

Because of the month "women are more recognized for their accomplishments and abilities," she continued.

Parrott said she believes the month is beneficial by educating people about women's accomplishments. "I think it's wonderful because it's important that people are made aware of women's past accomplishments."

"The month creates an awareness of the potentiality of women's mind and women's spirit," she added.

Gabbard said, "What we have are 18 events from various disciplines on campus; so we're celebrating the presence of women in those areas."

Symphony to play Sunday

The Danville Symphony Orchestra will be in Charleston Sunday to perform with Eastern's chorus.

Robert E. Snyder, coordinator of the event, said, the orchestra will perform Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, William Wanton's and Belshazzar's Feast.

About 12 Charleston residents, who were selected at a music department audition, will be also sing in chorus, Snyder said.

The orchestra and chorus are scheduled to perform at 3 p.m. Sunday at the Dvorak Concert Hall.

Tickets for the Eastern performance are $3.50 for adults, $2.50 for senior citizens and $2 for students with an ID card.

Tickets can be obtained at the music department office or at the Dvorak Concert Hall door.

In addition, the groups will perform at Danville High School Saturday.

Tickets for the Danville High School performance are $9 for adults, $7 for senior citizens and $4 for Eastern students with an ID.

Building of stage area approved

by Amy Zurawski

Funding for a concrete patio/stage area, which will be constructed adjacent to the Union on the Library Quad, was approved by the Board of Governors at their Feb. 23 meeting.

In Eastern President Stanley Rives' report to the BOG, he stated that the project involves the removal of the existing sidewalks, sod and gravel for the construction of a concrete patio and stage area.

His report cited that the construction cost of the project would be $13,063 and added that the total projected cost of the project, after paying architects and engineering fees, will be $15,496.

Glenn Williams, vice president of student affairs, said the construction of the stage "is hoped to be started by middle or late March."

"The weather is a problem now, but once it clears up and the construction begins, I don't think it will take more than three or four weeks to be completed," he added.

Williams said no specific activities have been planned for the stage yet, but anyone holding an activity in the Library Quad will be able to use it.

"Now, the people who use the quad have to perform on ground level, the library stairs or construct their own stage," he added. "With the stage, they will be able to perform off the ground and have a good backdrop."

In other business, the BOG approved funding for the replacement of badly-worn carpeting on the second and third floor rooms and hallways of the Union.

Also, the heating, ventilating and air conditioning system in the Radio-TV Center, Buzzard Building, will be completed.

University, not students, should pick up cost of additional lights

The BOG has just guaranteed Eastern about $35,000 so that the Union will have nice carpeting to walk on and that groups will be able to perform on the Library Quad without having to build a stage.

Fine and dandy. Both are undoubtedly needed.

Editorial

But what about the security problem that has been debated for the last three months on Eastern's dark campus?

Most of the security proposals thus far call for the students to pick up the tab.

Student Body President John Cole and Residence Hall Association President Joe Wheeler's campus security proposal is the most recent in a line of measures that, in one way or another, tags the students to pay, or partially pay, the butt of the project's expenses.

However, Cole and Wheeler's proposal seems to be a good one because it addresses the campus security problem on a long-term rather than short-term basis.

The proposal calls for $19,350 to pay for more lights on campus and additional student security workers for this fall. The overall program is to stretch over the next five years. But it also suggests funding be raised from a $1 per semester student fee increase next year.

Cole said that in a letter he received from Glenn Williams, vice president for student affairs, that paraphrased a conversation Williams had had with Vice President for Administration and Finance George Miller, the expense for lighting would be placed on the capital budget and would consequently be assumed by the university.

The hitch to this, however, is that the deadline for fee requests to be placed in the Fiscal Year 1985 budget has passed, so students may have to fork out the money until the BOG can come through, possibly no sooner than FY 86.

Cole said that if the university could not get state money, then he would approach the Apportionment Board to request student funding for the project.

The idea that there isn't any BOG funds available this fiscal year to help finance this program, which the senate and RHA has endorsed, is difficult to swallow.

The university must aim all its resources to solving this problem through responsible BOG fund allocations as quickly as possible.

While Cole and Wheeler's program hopes to achieve a higher level of security, it cannot be the students' responsibility to pay for campus maintenance nor sponsor employees in a security program.

Students didn't have to pay for the construction of the Tarble Arts Center or the residence halls; they should not be shouldered with the price tag for a safer campus.

Gary Burrows

Everyone must go along for the ride to start up non-transient transit

Of course, Norman Flash doesn't spend all of his time in Charleston bars with a glass of Coke in his hand and a righteous message of goodwill for anyone who will take the time to offer his attention.

Norman caught up with me on the Library Quad and set my mind on the topic of my last column.

The idea of a bus service in Charleston would solve many problems, and with Norman's sense of moral duty, a crusade to implement such a useful system is right up his alley.

"I liked your column," he offered between gasps after running to catch up with me. "What do you think are the chances of a bus service becoming reality?"

"It all depends on who picks up the idea and runs with it. If students have to take the sole brunt of funding for any type of busing system, then it will be impossible."

"Besides," Norman added, "the city stands to gain just as much. There's no doubt that many residents would find the system handy."

And he was right. Bruce Stoffel, from the Coles County Regional Planning Commission, noted that a study of Coles County showed considerable interest among the residents of both Charleston and Mattoon.

In Charleston, 70 percent of those polled were in favor of a bus service and asserted that they would use such a system. The figure in Mattoon was about 66 percent.

Unfortunately, the focus of the study was centered around fulfilling the needs of the elderly, economically disadvantaged and the handicapped; a noble gesture, indeed.

Things turned out well for these disadvantaged groups. The Charleston Area Senior Activities group has a nice little bus service that Stoffel said has had some positive results.

"But, what about the students?" Norman asked. "While it's right to take care of these people, the students and the residents plow a lot of money into Charleston and Mattoon. Certainly the city can turn some of their gains back into the city in the form of bus service."

"They could think of it as an investment. If the city gets more people to the stores, the businesses will have oodles more money rolling in."

"I agree. I'm sure they could even work out a system where the residents, students, the cities' governments and businesses could equally share the load. Everyone would benefit."

"But, the real problem is getting the ball rolling and accomplishing the many tasks that are tied to such a venture."

The gleam in Norman's eye fired up as his mind set into gear, plotting a plan of action like a glowing young host taking care of the tiny details of a crucial dinner party. "What we need to do is get the right groups interested."

"What we need is someone to take on all the work involved. Is there sources of revenue to cover it? Where will the service run? How many buses are needed?"

"People need to be surveyed; studies need to be made. Who's going to do it?"

"I'll tell you who should do it," Norman asserted. "We need to bring the city councils, Eastern's administration, Student Senate, chambers of commerce, students and residents together to start this thing in action."

"And it wouldn't hurt you to help out a little bit yourself," he added with a smirk.

Knowing Norman, he's not going to let anyone forget this issue easily. He's certain to drive this issue home until it does become reality.

And what's wrong with that?

Senior Jean Imherr said, "I think the class is fun because they've never offered it before."

Bridget Sullivan, who also is a senior, said, "It's the kind of class where you have to push yourself to go, but then once you're there it's fun."

Junior Christine Ruley added, "I like the class because I like dance and it helps break up the day some. It's fun."

There are 15 students enrolled in tap dance, but Yu said she expects more students will enroll in the course next year. "I think the students are interested in the class and that's why they're in it."

will be given to evaluate a student's creativity in an original dance routine.

Yu said although her degrees from Smith College and Texas Woman's University were in physical education, her emphasis was in dance education.

Yu said she enjoys teaching tap dancing. "I find that tap dancing has a distinct rhythm to it and I enjoy teaching it."

Students enrolled in the class need to provide their own shoes and taps. The average price for a pair of leather shoes and taps is $18.50, Yu noted.

Existentialism? What'cha think?

by Diane Schneidman
Some classes are filled with facts. Other classes are filled with experiments. And some classes just can't be defined.
Existentialism is a class that can't be defined.
Philosophy instructor Frank Taylor (who would prefer to be called

"It made me realize that there's a different philosophy besides that we're going to die and go to heaven."

Professor X) said, "To define existentialism would be non-existential."
But why would one want to take a class that can't be defined?

Senior Karen Kosmen discovered, as result of her existentialism class, that the philosophies regarding life are taught in high school and hometown churches are not the only ideas available.

"It made me realize that there's a different philosophy besides that we're going to die and go to heaven. According to existentialism, there's no life after death, so you have to make the most of life here," she said.

Ponderance of such subjects seems to be exactly what Taylor is shooting for. He explained that his whole purpose in lecturing is to, "maximize, modularize and optimize learning interactions."

"I like to maintain a task-oriented class," he continued, "that optimizes feedback."

But, if a class can't be defined what does Taylor lecture about? Most of his lecture stems from the assigned readings.

Senior Grant Sterling said the class calls for a lot of reading that is not particularly easy to do.

These readings include writings by such philosophers as Kierkegaard, Dostoyevsky, Nietzsche and Sartre.

After the readings are completed and the lecturing done, Taylor said, he hopes students will be able to form their own opinions about the ways of the world.

Taylor explained that he is trying to encourage originality and independence of thought in the existentialism class.

Kosmen said, "You have to listen to other philosophers and decide what you agree with and what you disagree with. And if you disagree with something, then you have to develop your own ideas."

Because of the thinking that the course involves, Kosmen found that taking the course helped her come to terms with herself. "Before then, I didn't really think about who I was or where I was going."

However, Sterling said he has not been as profoundly affected by the class. "I fundamentally disagree with existentialism because it's basically a revolt against rationalism."

Even so, Sterling has found the class to be somewhat enjoyable because of the atmosphere.

"The key is, I think he (Taylor) is very good at getting people to know each other in class. I probably know more people in there than any of my other classes," Sterling said.

Existentialism might be a worthwhile course to take. Or it might not be. Think about it.

Scuba-diving course breathtaking

by Doble Holland

Being deprived of air can be a frightening experience, but students enrolled in scuba-diving class cope with using little oxygen as routinely as getting out of bed in the morning.

Scuba-diving instructor Ray Padovan said students enrolled in Physical Education 2144 "Technique and Theory of Scuba Diving" are required to use a great deal of concentration and mental discipline to complete the course.

Scuba-diving students are unfamiliar with functioning underwater so they have to adjust, Padovan said.

Senior Cathy Stevens, currently enrolled in one of the two sections of scuba diving this semester, she said being enrolled in the course is fun.

"The first time I dove into the water, it was unbelievable. I felt like Jacques Cousteau," Stevens said, adding that she thought the experience was also scary.

Senior Greg Adams agrees the class can be scary. "When you're 20 feet underwater without oxygen you have to think—it's mind over matter."

Mental discipline and concentration are needed—especially the first day of class when the students take the pre-test. Padovan noted that during the pre-test, a student is expected to swim two widths of Lantz Pool underwater.

The test also requires the student to swim around the pool on his stomach for 10 minutes, he said.

Students must drop the course if they fail to pass the pre-test, Padovan said. "One or two normally drop out of a normal class of 25 students," he noted.

Furthermore, if a student lacks concentration, he will not perform well in this class, Padovan said.

To aid a student's ability to function underwater, concentration and maintaining control under pressure

Students in scuba diving learn the proper and safe techniques for the sport. Two sections are offered this semester to students. Students must pass a water safety test before situations, Padovan puts his students through a number of strenuous drills.

"I put them in uncomfortable situations, which forces them to react positively," he said. The drills teach students to react in a safe way, he added.

Students, who have taken the course, would fervently disagree if they were to hear someone call scuba diving is a "blow-off" class.

Freshman Tim Sekosky became a certified diver at the end of the the scuba-diving course he took last semester.

Sekosky said the drills were a difficult task while taking the class. "The drills usually deprived you of oxygen," he said.

Sekosky noted that a certain drill required him to swim underwater, holding a regulator (mouth-piece) in his hand. He had to then swim to an air tank at the bottom of the pool.

Once he reached the air tank, he had to attach the regulator to the air tank by feeling where the regulator connects to the air tank.

Next, he had to draw his needed oxygen from the tank by breathing through the regulator for the sole purpose of swimming to yet another tank at the bottom of the pool.

Sekosky said the most difficult part of the drill was his inability to see underwater. "I had to feel connection between the tank and the regulator to join them together. While this is happening, your body is craving for air," he said.

It takes mind control not to surface the water when a person begins to feel the need for air, he added.

Junior Russell Smith viewed the class as a challenge. "It took me into unexplored territory and my body and my mind had to perform as one."

TV Production course students in the media

by Rajendra Sinha

Lights! Camera! Action!

The quietness of the studio room suddenly explodes with the thunderous glare of camera lights and the deafening roar of the director's commands.

The crew members zoom in with intense concentration, trying to capture the essence of the shot. Then suddenly, it's all over. "Cut! Cut!" shouts the director. "Let's go over this again."

Although Speech-Communications 3540 "Television Production" has been offered at Eastern for years, interest has been recently generated by the new facilities used in the television production course.

Jacqueline Kelly, a Radio-TV Center student, said the $300,000, has been chased over the last year so.

The range includes audio-production, control room, studio cameras and other equipment.

Tammy Drewes said that besides the basic television test, "I can learn even to do a graphic show and a 10-minute documentary."

Drewes, who wants to go into television production or a related field, she believes the course

Athletic trainers need a lot more than just 'patients'

by Jane Erickson

Three flights of stairs are a lot to climb just to attend class. However, injury recognition class students make the trip to Lantz Gym's third floor every Tuesday and Thursday to learn about recognizing and treating athletic injuries.

Although the course name leads one to believe the Physical Education 3131 "Injury Recognition," sounds basic, unchallenging class, faculty members said the class is a lot of work.

Health education instructor Robert Doyle said the class, which is specifically for athletic trainers, requires the students to complete a lot of outside work.

"These kids put in a lot of work. They put in 300 hours (per semester) besides classwork," Doyle said.

The outside work is required to allow students the opportunity to gain practical experience. It includes tending to injured athletes, Doyle said.

Inside class work includes role playing, in which students portray injured athletes, while classmates tend to the injuries.

Health education instructor Cheryl Birkhead said although actual injuries are different from class demonstrations, role playing helps students gain knowledge about athletic injuries.

help her in her future career. Junior Stephenie Coartney, who has a minor in television production said she got her involved in the class because she "likes working with cameras."

Coartney said having an adequate background in television production will help her in the public relations job she would like to enter later in life.

Many students said they believe handling something technical gives them feelings of creativity and satisfaction.

Senior Nick Philips, who said he prefers to remain behind cameras, said he would want to get into a television production career which would encompass various elements such as cable-broadcasting, commercials and news.

Apparently, there appears to be a growing interest amongst students to join this course. Iftekhar Khan, a student worker at the instructional media center, said that with the growing emphasis on audio-visual concepts in the American society, it will be to the individual's benefit to enroll in such courses.

Not joust another class

Students discover a 'foil'ing class

by Dan Verdun

Several students who like to avoid being "stabbed in the back"—or in the front for that matter—have tried to prevent being "foiled" by enrolling in fencing class.

And fencing students learn some piercing terms such as touche, en guard, epee and similar slashing jargon.

Fencing instructor Lorraine Flower said fencing offers the student an athletic course alternative. "It's a much different sport than most students had in high school; so it's something new for them."

Flower, who has taught fencing for 15 years, said students are taught the basic skills of the sport and practice those skills in class. Students enrolled in fencing will eventually participate in tournament bouts, she said.

Flower added she enjoys the class because most students begin the course without previous knowledge of fencing. "Most students have no prior experience so they must learn it from the start. It's fun watching them progress."

Students, however, enjoy the course for other reasons. Sophomore Judy Bettencourt said, "I like the fact that it improves my concentration."

Sophomore Tom Studebaker said the fencing course has enhanced his study of history. "I'm extremely interested in the Renaissance and the time periods in which swords were used in combat. By taking fencing, I can have that experience."

Senior Mike Price had a different reason for taking fencing. "I wanted to take something that I wouldn't ever get the chance to take again."

Studebaker noted that fencing demands skill. "A skillful fencer will beat a hack-and-slayer anytime."

Price said he enjoys the challenge of fencing. "It's fun trying not to get stabbed. Even though the sword tips are blunted and you're wearing protective clothing, you're still a little scared of being hit," he added.

Price cited that some drawbacks of fencing include "probably fencing with girls."

Bettencourt said, "It's a little uncomfortable fencing against males because we're both afraid of hitting each other in certain areas." She added that the fact that males are also "a lot stronger" makes it difficult to fence against them.

Senior Sharon Ryley puts her fencing skill into use against sophomore Vincent Kodatt. Fencing is one of the more unique physical education courses offered at Eastern. (News file photo)

'Footloose' trips over its own feet

FOOTLOOSE

When you're a welder by day and a lounge dancer by night, it's just fine to have dreams of greater glory. But when you're the new kid in a small Utah town that's so strict that dancing is forbidden, you've got to have the music on your side. Or so the marketing department behind Footloose tells us.

Unfortunately for all concerned, Footloose has very little of the butt-thumping, toe-tapping magic necessary to motivate huge spending sprees or dancing in the aisles. After some truly-inspired opening credits, the film glides off in its own direction, to the sleepy little burg of Beaumont, Utah.

Here Chicago transfer student Ren (Kevin Bacon) finds himself labeled as the kid with the bad attitude and all just because he shatters the pristine environment with a little Quiet Riot.

And the teenagers are different. The majority of his new mates sport cowboy hats and consider a game of chicken on tractors par for the course to manhood. Worst of all, they haven't even heard of the Police, let alone Quiet Riot.

Indeed, any kind of rock n' roll revelry has been squelched by a town ordinance, including concerts, dances and public playing of radios. Even the kids agree it's for the best, because five years earlier a carload of teenagers were killed in what the local minister, Rev. Shaw Moore (John Lithgow), deemed a direct result of the influences of rock n' roll.

But newcomer Ren, like any good teen deprived of his MTV long enough, sees the time is ripe for a change. He wants the law off the books and—gasp!—organizes a senior dance to be held within the city limits.

How he stands up against all the adversity and hypocrisy thrown at him by his right-wing classmates and the Bible-thumping townspeople is the basis for Footloose and it would have made a likable enough movie. But Footloose marches out cliché after cliché, looking for a plot device that will make it more than just another Flashdance.

The minister's daughter (Lori Singer) takes a shine to him almost as soon as they're on screen together. And, of course, her old boyfriend comes looking for a fight just as Ren is experiencing his moment of glory.

Book burning is thrown in, apparently just for the hell of it. We've got a couple of mid-life crises, strained family relations and huge volleys of the clean-living ethic. You name it—they've put it in here.

But for all its contrivances, Footloose is not a bad movie. It plays down the paper-thin MTV padding that so greatly tried my patience in the despicable Flashdance.

The two or three dance numbers that were probably choreographed with bigger things in mind still look enough at home on the Utah prairie to merit inclusion.

And in the lead role of Ren, Kevin Bacon is an agreeable and energetic choice.

Lori Singer strikes an off-note in the production as Ren's love interest, the minister's daughter that's too wild to tame. The script deserves much of the blame here. When she comes upon Ren in an empty warehouse at the end of his solo dance number, he asks, "How did you find me?"

"The town has eyes," she answers. Meryl Streep couldn't have convinced me of that one.

Footloose loses its way trying to straddle too many different approaches to its story. The plotting often cuts its legs right out from under it, so the spirit has to gain fresh momentum all over again. When it does find it feet, as it does in the glitter at the film's finale, it almost makes you forget some of the gaffes along the way. Almost.

Ry and Drole

Tale End All around 'class'ics

Some would believe that I've got class. Actually, I think I'm worldly. My knowledge of the world is basically derived from the unique selection of classes I've taken.

First, I was convinced that I wanted to be a politician. After taking a couple of political science courses, I realized I could never be party to any political games. Besides, after I received my grades for those classes, I knew my potential constituents would not elect me for my brains.

Then I thought I wanted to be a botany major. So, of course, I took a couple of science courses. Afterwards, I knew my field was not in nature.

Canoeing was an especially disastrous class. Taking this class was an offshoot of my back-to-nature binge. Thank God I knew how to swim. I dropped that class.

And, of course, who's college career would be complete without taking business courses? I didn't know what I wanted to do. The potpourri of business classes I took sure didn't help me make any satisfying career decisions.

So, I suffered the normal what-am-I-going-to-do-with-the-rest-of-my-life syndrome. During this shaky, disillusioning time, I ran the gamut of courses offered with hopes that one day—possibly while standing in the add-drop lines—I would know what I wanted to do with the rest of my life.

Finally, it hit me. Guitar. So, I took a fundamental guitar course. I always had a feeling there was musical talent within me just dying to be nurtured. The only problem was I couldn't play and read music at the same time. I knew my potential career was over after taking that course. I was in tune with reality.

Now, I'm taking tap dance. John Travolta doesn't have to worry. Although I look like him without the cleft, I can't dance a thing like him.

It's a good thing Eastern doesn't offer a sky-diving course.

Tracksters compete for AMCU title despite injuries

by Mike Nelson

Eastern's men's track team will try to overcome several injuries of key players Friday and Saturday when the Panthers compete for the Association of Mid-Continent Universities title.

Eastern veteran pole vaulter Roxy Wood is suffering a sprained ankle; middle-distance runner Mark Smith has the flu; and triple-jumper Mike Kelly has a pulled hamstring.

All three are listed as "questionable" Friday when the AMCU conducts its first indoor championship at Western Illinois University.

"We have designed our training from the start of the season to peak at this point," Eastern head coach Neil Moore said. "This meet will test our character and should be very interesting."

"We will be running a lot of people a lot of the time so we're going to be very tired," he continued. "This meet will test how much heart we have."

Moore said he expects the University of Northern Iowa to win the overall championship and Eastern and Southwest Missouri State University to fight for second place.

"We will definitely have trouble with Northern Iowa," Moore said. "They have good sprinters, good pole vaulters and have so much depth in every event."

"The only thing they have going against them is that they have as many injuries as we do," he added.

Moore said he is expecting a strong performance from his mile-relay team of Claude Magee, Chris Johnson, Drew Geisler and Paul West.

"We'll be in great shape if these four runners place well," Moore said. "Our long-distance runners should be able to take some points away from Northern Iowa because I don't think their long distance runners are as strong as the rest of their team."

Magee, Eastern's top sprinter, will not be running the 300-meter dash because the event is not included in NCAA conference meets, Moore said.

Meanwhile, Geisler will be gunning to beat his previous best of 1:54.7 in the 880-meter run. "Drew is way ahead of any previous year I've seen him," Moore said. "He is doing exceptionally this year."

Women cagers battle SIU Salukis

by Jeff Long

With its conference title hopes exhausted, Eastern's women's basketball team will look to play the role of spoiler Saturday on the road against Southern Illinois University-Carbondale.

The Panthers, 15-10 overall and 9-6 in the Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference, will make their third attempt this season to defeat the league-leading Salukis, 20-5 overall and 13-2 in the conference.

In the teams' previous meetings the Salukis have downed the Panthers, taking a 69-60 decision at the Lady Tiger Invitational in Memphis, Tenn. and a 72-55 win Feb. 4 at Lantz Gym.

This time around, the Panthers will look to penetrate Southern's strong defense and tighten up their own defensive play.

Eastern head coach Bobbie Hilke said Thursday, "We're going to have to try to keep the ball out of Char Warring's hands. 'She's the one who has hurt us.'"

Warring, a 6-foot-2 forward, burned Eastern for 27 points the last time the two teams met. However, the Panthers held the Salukis high-scoring guard duo of D.D. Plab and Petra Jackson to a combined 10 points.

"I think we did a good job on their guards last time, but we're going to have to play a really solid game and take it to them to win," Hilke said.

A bright spot for the Panthers has been the strong play of forward Toni Collins and guard Melanie Hatfield.

Hatfield, a gutsy performer all season, single-handedly kept the Panthers in the team's last game, accounting for 21 points. And Collins poured in 42 points in Eastern's two losses last week.

In addition to Collins, the Panther front-line will be anchored by Sue Hynd and Chris Aldridge. However, Hilke said Aldridge will be hampered by a sore left ankle.

Cagers battle for third place in conference

by Mike Lynch

If there's one thing Eastern's basketball teams would like Saturday night, it's a share of third place in the Association of Mid-Continent Universities standings.

The Panthers stand a victory away from Southwest Missouri State University and at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, the two teams will clash for the second time this season.

"I definitely think our guys will enter the game feeling they can really accomplish something with a win," Panther head coach Rick Samuels said Thursday.

Eastern, 6-6 and 14-11 overall, can also move above the .500 mark in the AMCU for the first time since Jan. 19. Meanwhile, Southwest Missouri enters Saturday's action 7-5 in the league and 15-9 overall.

Although the Bears have won four of five contests against the Panthers overall, Southwest Missouri head coach Charlie Spoonhour said Thursday that he doesn't expect an easy night.

"Eastern's one of the most well-prepared teams we play all season," Spoonhour said. "I think they outplayed us for 38 minutes, but we were very fortunate down the stretch."

The Panthers lost to the Bears 53-52 Feb. 13 in Springfield, Mo., but Samuels said playing at home will be a big lift for his squad.

Consequently, Samuels said the tough loss will be in the back of the Panthers' minds this time around.

"With the way our guys are playing, it's hard to say any one player will be a key," Samuels said. "I'd like to pick five guys and say they're all going to play key roles."

However, the four-year Panther coach said he hopes to utilize the Panthers' size advantage in the middle. The 6-foot-11 center Kevin Duckworth will be matched against the Bears' 6-foot-5 Gray.

Spoonhour said Duckworth, who notched 16 points against the Bears in the teams' first meeting, really poses a problem for his club.

"It's tough for our team to look at Duckworth as just an individual; because he's so much bigger than any of our guys he plays like a group," Spoonhour said.

In addition, Spoonhour said Panther forward Jon Collins, who scored 18 points against the Bears earlier, presents a great problem for his team.

"It was virtually impossible for us stop him," Spoonhour said. "He's a great player who seemed like he could have scored on us anytime he wanted."

Spoonhour said looking for the good shot has been a key for the Bears, who are coming off a 70-percent shooting effort against Oklahoma City College Wednesday night.

"We are just shooting the ball so well lately," he said. "Our shooting has been the saving grace of our team."

Panther notes... Eastern will host the four-team National Junior College Athletic Association Region V basketball tournament Saturday. Wabash Valley plays Illinois Central College 1:30 p.m. Saturday, while Olney Central and Belleville square off at 3:30 p.m. The region's East-West all-star game is slated for 12:30 p.m. Sunday.

Sox sign Hoyt, Dotson, Kittle to new contracts

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP)—The Chicago White Sox opened their checkbook Thursday to make Cy Young Award winner LaMarr Hoyt the American League's first $1 million a year pitcher, and also signed 22-game winner Richard Dotson and Rookie of the Year Ron Kittle.

"The signings today show that our owners want continue to return to the playoffs for years to come," said General Manager Roland Hemond.

Hoyt, 29, was 24-10 last season for the Western Division champions, and Dotson, 25, who posted a 22-7 mark, both signed six-year pacts that will carry them past free-agency eligibility.

Hoyt had three years of major league service to go before he would have been eligible for free agency; Dotson was two years away.

"Usually, clubs wait until a player is one or two years away from free agency to make a deal," said Ron Shapiro, Hoyt's attorney.

Hoyt's contract calls for three years at $1 million guaranteed, with three option years.
