Graduate students may buy textbooks

Although undergraduates will still be required to rent textbooks in the fall, Eastern graduate students will have the option to buy their books.

Also in the fall of 1993, Eastern faculty members will have greater say in which textbooks will be used in their classes in the coming years.

These recommendations were among five proposals adopted by Eastern's Textbook Rental Review Committee and endorsed by the Faculty and Student Senates and Eastern President David Jorns.

They are premised on the continued existence of Eastern's Textbook Rental Service, which charges students $39 per semester to rent basic textbooks for all courses.

"Given that entering graduate students have made a professional commitment and that many graduate students place a high priority on building a library related to their professional interests, the Textbook Rental Review Committee recommended that graduate students be given the option of purchasing their texts at the beginning of each term, with the Textbook Rental Service fee waived," said Dan Klingenberg, director of Eastern's Textbook Rental Service.

Beginning next fall, graduate students will be permitted to purchase their textbooks between the first class day and the 20th class day of the semester. Students who purchase their textbooks during this period of time will be given a refund of their textbook rental fee. Those purchasing after the 20th day will not receive a refund.

Klingenberg does not anticipate any additional cost because of the new graduate student policy for textbook rental.

Graduate students who do not wish to purchase textbooks may rent them through the Textbook Rental Service.

Undergraduate students will still be required to rent their textbooks at the beginning of each term, but will be able to purchase their books at a depreciated rate later in the semester.

To make the option of purchasing textbooks more attractive, the Textbook Rental Review Committee recommended depreciating the cost of each textbook according to the number of semesters the book has been used.

In the fall, students will be able to purchase reduced cost books between the 20th day of class and the 60th day of class. Each time a book is used, it will be depreciated 10 percent of the retail cost, up to a maximum of 50 percent of the value of the book. The book will never go below 50 percent of the retail cost no matter how many times it is used.

"Due to the fact that textbooks in our system, because of our large ordering procedures, are not depreciated in the strict sense, we are not able to take full depreciation. However, the process should facilitate the desire to pur-

No action taken in bookstore findings

Neither Eastern or the Coles County State's Attorney will take any action on a case involving alleged purchasing irregularities at the Martin King Jr. University Union Bookstore.

Illinois State Police Dept. investigators concluded that in early 1992 there was a bidding procedure that was not conducted properly but that there was no evidence that the parties involved received any financial benefit from the deal. The case revolved around a bid for a bookstore publication at an approximate cost of $4,100.

The state police's report that, on one occasion, an Eastern employee received a gift from a sales representative worth approximately $300.

Instead of taking any action, Eastern has accepted the voluntary resignation of a union employee and is in the process of instituting additional safeguards in its purchasing procedures.

The investigation started in early December of 1992 after the Board of Governor's Chancellor's office contacted the state police's division of investigation.

Last Wednesday, The Daily Eastern News reported that James Rardin, whose duties included overseeing the bookstore and computer applications in the union, resigned as assistant director of the union on June 30.

Rardin said that he was not forced to resign by the university and that the state police's investigation had nothing to do with his decision to leave Eastern. Instead, he said that his decision was a career move.

City liquor board to hear proposal

The Charleston Liquor Advisory Board will meet at 5 p.m. Monday in City Hall to review what has become a controversial transfer of a liquor license.

Donna Bickers, president of H.H. Hooters corporation, is seeking to transfer the liquor license her corporation held at 1412 Fourth St. to a new establishment at 1000 18th St.

The new establishments building sits in front of a trailer park between Charleston High School and Wilb Walkers East. The building is also in close proximity to Charleston Junior High School and Mark Twain elementary school.

Some concerned parents began to circulate petitions last week in opposition to the bar. According to a Charleston Times-Courier article last week, the parents are concerned with the effects having a bar so close to the students.

The city liquor ordinance has a provision that prohibits a liquor establishment from locating within 100 feet of a school. The distance between the bar and the schools has not been measured.

Bickers could not be reached for comment on the issue Sunday evening.

The liquor board will make a recommendation of whether or not to grant Bickers request to Charleston Mayor Dan Cougill, who is also the city's liquor commissioner, at Monday's meeting. Cougill will make the final decision on the matter.

East coast heat slacks off

By The Associated Press

The killer heat wave steaming the East Coast slacked off slightly Sunday, from a full boil to a simmer, leaving wilted multitudes grateful for small favors.

After days of triple-digit heat in some areas, temperatures fell into the mid-90s. But more hot, humid weather was forecast through Tuesday.

Twenty-one deaths have been blamed on brutal heat. Seventeen deaths came in the Philadelphia area, including a 4-year-old boy who died inside a parked car on Saturday.

Beaches, lakes, rivers and pools were packed from New England to Miami. Nudists around the country gathered as part of an American Sunbathing Association celebration of clothes-free tanning.

"I don't see anybody seeking shade at this moment," said Hessa Schneider, president of the Maine Coast Solar Bears, at a nude picnic in Richmond.

In the Merrimack Valley in Massachusetts, about 600 Harley-Davidson motorcycle enthusiasts, many in leather outfits, made a fund-raising cruise for the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

"It felt like a hairdryer," said biker Dave McKenzie of the sweltering ride, which was followed by a barbecue and carnival.

"On a day like today, we'll have more people waiting in line to get dunked (in the dunking tank) than throwing balls," said Chip Dougherty, an event organizer.

Broad-based energy tax dead

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee predicted a compromise with the House on President Clinton's economic package, but said Sunday it may require pushing the proposed gasoline tax up another few pennies and perhaps adding an electric utility "surcharge." Clinton's broad-based energy tax is dead, said Sen. Daniel P.

Moynihan, D-N.Y., head of the finance panel who will play a key role in the upcoming negotiations with the House on a final tax-and-spending bill aimed at reducing the deficit.

The House approved a package in May that includes Clinton's proposed broad-based energy tax based on the heat content of each fuel — the so-called "Btu tax." But the Senate version, approved narrowly June 25, has a 4.3 cent-per-gallon gasoline tax instead.

Both bills aim to cut the deficit by $500 billion over five years through spending cuts and tax increases. House and Senate negotiators begin to work out differences in a conference Thursday.

"We will reach an agreement," Moynihan said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press." Moynihan said the tax increases would not be retroactive to January, as some have suggested.

"I think tax increases should start ... after the bill's passed," he said.

chase the books at a depreciated rate," Jorns said.

In order to promote high-quality instruction in each section of courses with multiple sections, the Textbook Rental Review Committee further recommended that the university adopt a formal policy that permits individual instructors to select texts that in their professional judgement meet their teaching objectives and students' needs. However, it will be up to the college deans to notify Textbook Rental whether or not different books for courses with multiple sections are acceptable.

In the past, the same books, as recommended by the college departmental committees, have been used for multiple course sections.

The new multiple sections policy will not be implemented before the Fall of 1994 because of the necessity of significant alterations in Computer Services support, according to Jorns.

Faculty members will also have more money to spend on textbooks following a recommendation by Jorns to raise the textbook selection limit from $50 to $60 per semester beginning next fall. Since the $60 cost limit will not be sufficient for some classes, the university does have a policy that allows faculty to exceed the cost limit by discussing their request with the Textbook Rental Service.

Another recommendation by the Textbook Rental Committee involves expanding the focus of the current University Bookstore or establishing a separate facility that deals exclusively with the sale of books.

In response to that recommendation, Jorns said, "Though I certainly support the desire of the university community to have a full-service bookstore, we are under severe constraints from the state of Illinois and are not allowed to compete with private vendors.

"We do not have the wherewithal, of course, to build a separate bookstore and would have to expand the inventory within the University Bookstore. However, to do this would be to put us in possible competition with local vendors and certainly cause concern within our surrounding commercial environment."

Jorns has asked the bookstore staff to examine the feasibility of this proposal, on both a legal and inventory accrual basis, to see what further action can be taken.

First Black Student's All-Classes Reunion a success

By DANA PHELPS
Managing editor

John Cook, a 1982 graduate of Eastern, returned to campus this weekend for the first time since he graduated and was one of many people to attend the first annual Black Student All-Classes Reunion.

"Until now, there has been no reason (to return)," Cook said. "There has been no significance."

Although there have been other reunions of the sorts, usually organized by the Black Student Union held around Homecoming, Cook said that he was never informed of such events. He went on to say that, along with others at the reunion, he feels he has been improperly informed and updated, thus creating some resentment against the university.

Cook said that he felt that black students were not really a part of the "main stream" of campus when he was a student and that things seem to have become worse.

Cook spoke of graduation rates and enrollment of black students, and said that even though these rates have appeared to improve, they are still relatively low.

"First and foremost it is the university's responsibility to raise these rates, and then its probably the responsibility of alumni, but its kind of like the egg before the chicken," Cook said adding that it might be difficult for some alumni to want to help a university they feel somewhat ignored them.

Cook said what he enjoyed most about the reunion was just seeing the people. He said that the stories shared seemed to connect everyone there and made them realize that they had all had similar experiences and felt the same pain regardless the generation from which they came.

"It was a marvelous experience felt by everyone," Cook said.

Cook added that he had mixed feelings driving to Eastern from his home in Appleton, Wisc., when he thought about seeing old friends and being back on campus, but he said he got what he expected and more.

"I didn't realize how happy I would be to be back," he said.

Speaking more specifically about the planning of the reunion, Cook said that it was very well organized, and that all the activities and social events were well planned.

"The picnic was one of the things I enjoyed most. It felt like a family reunion. It was a family atmosphere in which there was a lot of love generated, and it was good to see that everyone was doing well," said Cook.

Cook said people from all ages were present including current students, and that many travelled great distances to attend.

"We would have liked to have seen Kevin Duckworth," Cook said adding that he was a senior when Duckworth was a freshman, "I would have never thought he would go pro. He was slow. He has progressed a lot!"

Cook noted various changes on campus, the most significant to him being the absence of his fraternity house (Phi Beta Sigma) which was located on 7th Street where Park Place apartments now stand.

Summing up his feelings of the weekend Cook said, "It was a great experience to find that people feel the way I do...they care and they want to see improvements. A lot of people have already made efforts to do that."

California blues artist brings diversity to area

By MITCH McGLAUGHLIN
Editor in chief

Elaine Townsend, a blues musician from Oakland, Calif., will be in Charleston Tuesday evening to spread her unique blend of blues, country, reggae and rock.

The free concert in the front room of Friends & Co. is in support of her Hands in Flight release called "Heartbreaker Blues."

"Heartbreaker Blues," Townsend's nine-song debut album, catalogues the divergent musical styles the South Carolina native has been mixing since her performance debut at the age of 16.

"I had to sneak out of the house to go play in a bar," Townsend said in a phone interview with a South Carolina newspaper. "That first night and my first few gigs after that really gave me the bug. I knew what I wanted to do."

Townsend left South Carolina for the bay-area music scene of San Francisco after graduating from the University of South Carolina with a degree in psychology. It was there that she found a growing progressive scene and lots of contacts in the music industry.

"It was kind of like setting off on a great adventure," said Townsend.

"Having grown up in South Carolina, I wanted to experience another part of the country. I'd traveled around some the summer before and really liked the bay area, so after graduation, I packed up and went back."

Townsend's heartfelt songs and easy-going guitar styles found a welcome home in the bay-area.

As her popularity spread, her audiences grew, until she found herself opening a show for Grammy-winning singer k.d. lang at a packed show of 2,500 in Santa Rosa.

"I have to admit my level of commitment to music has been gradual over the years, but that night, I got a taste of what the big time is like, and I certainly want to achieve that level now," said Townsend.

Townsend will be continuing her road to the top at Friends & Co., 509 Van Buren, with a free show in the front room.

Blues artist Elaine Townsend

'Heartbreaker Blues' falls victim to first effort formula

By STEVE LYSAKER
Staff writer

With the solid vocals, tight musicianship, well-crafted lyrics and fine production found on Elaine Townsend's "Heartbreaker Blues," it would appear that the album is near flawless.

Unfortunately, that is not so. "Heartbreaker Blues" lacks two key musical elements: consistency and inspiration.

What at first sounds like a laid-back, country-blues album with some nice, twangy (although formulaic) guitar solos and piano work suddenly transforms into an upbeat reggae, country-rock production before switching back to the sleepy urban blues feel.

Although the style of the album is too unique to be compared to the folk-rock of the Indigo Girls or the reggae-country-rock of the Eagles, "Heartbreaker Blues" isn't quite good enough to be set on a pedestal by itself.

"Heartbreaker Blues" sounds like Townsend's attempt to find a musical identity and each time the listener thinks she's picked one, she throws a rod into the machine in the form of an odd tempo change or complete stylistic turnaround.

Through her lyrics, Townsend does her best to transcend the disorienting stylistic changes. The written words seem heartfelt and are phrased nicely in the songs, but Townsend lacks the broken-hearted, bluesy edge to pull them off.

It doesn't seem as if she has experienced the lost love and loneliness she's singing about.

Townsend does have a fine, smooth tenor voice, it just doesn't happen to fit with the sound(s) of the album. Instead of delivering her lyrics with broken-hearted, guttural feeling, Townsend just sounds very sleepy.

Townsend's problem, however, is nothing too uncommon and nothing that can't be fixed. Any number of current country-rock-blues musicians lacked the hard edge to convincingly convey their feelings in a musical manner that listeners could relate to when they began. It's a problem that age and experience (usually with a side order of non-filtered cigarettes and whiskey) will remedy.

Bar location transfer, if legal, should be OK'd

A petition is being circulated to prevent the re-location of one of Charleston's liquor licenses to a new site.

Donna Bickers, the president of a H.H. Hooters, a local corporation, is asking for the Charleston Liquor Advisory Board to transfer a liquor license currently held by her corporation, which was formerly operated a bar at 1412 Fourth St. to a new location at 1000 18th St.

Local concerns center around the proximity of the proposed location to both Charleston High School, Charleston Junior High and Mark Twain elementary school.

Current liquor ordinances prohibit the location of a bar within 100 feet of a school.

An official measurement of the distance between the schools and the proposed site has not yet been done, but Bickers is certain that the application satisfies all legal criteria.

The concerns from the parents are understandable, but if the application does not violate any existing ordinances, the transfer of location should be approved.

Parents who are concerned about the location of a bar so close to their children's daily activities should first ask whether the proposed establishment will even be open during the hours of the schools' operation.

If concerns center around the planning of evening activities such as dances and sporting events in an area with a bar in close proximity, perhaps the concerned parents should glance down the road to the package liquor store where, unlike the newly proposed bar, liquor is sold for consumption outside of the confines of the establishment which holds the license.

If the local ordinances are not sufficient to protect the children of this community, they should be changed, not interpreted at the convenience of any local group.

It is not the job of the Charleston Liquor Commission to baby-sit the youth of Charleston, but it is their job to fairly interpret the laws and hand down a decision.

Learning all of the normal facts

The saying goes that "you learn something every day." I don't necessarily subscribe to that theory, but it worked for me one day last week.

While looking through a summer edition of The Daily Vidette, Illinois State University's student newspaper, I stumbled across a half-page ad sponsored by the Normal Police Department.

The ad wants Illinois State students to "Know the facts" about what can happen if they are caught with alcohol in illegal ways. Those dozen or so facts and the fines that can be assessed if the facts are not followed were shocking.

• Fact No. 1: Kegs can not be transported after 10 p.m. If a person is found illegally transporting a keg after that curfew, a $500 fine could result.

The biggest difference between Normal and Charleston is that you have to be at least 21-years-old to enter a bar in Normal. Charleston has a 19-year-old bar entry age. So house parties are held more frequently than they are in Charleston. This law was probably made to deter those house parties from starting late in the evening.

Charleston City Attorney Brian Bower said that Charleston has no ordinance against transporting kegs of beer after a certain time.

• Fact No. 2: Admission for parties can not be charged. Anyone doing so in Normal could be slapped with a $1,000 fine for the sale of alcohol without a license.

That same offense in Charleston brings a minimum fine of $350 and court costs according to Bower.

• Fact No. 3 (which feeds off of facts one and two): The legal drinking age is 21. There is nothing surprising about that fact. In order to drink alcohol anywhere in the United States a person has to be at least 21-years-old — something that many Eastern students may forget when they are 19-and 20-years old and inside the Charleston bars.

Illegal consumption of alcohol in Normal brings a $150 fine. In Charleston the fine is a bit steeper at $200 and court costs. Anyone under the age of 19 caught in a Charleston bar is assessed a $100 fine and court costs, Bower said.

• Fact No. 4: No public urination. Relieving oneself in the middle of the street in Normal is worth a $50 fine. In Charleston, the same offense is 10 bucks cheaper at $40.

• Other facts from the Normal Police:

No open alcohol in public regardless of age. Possession of open alcohol is a $100 fine in Normal. How are they supposed to drink it? Through osmosis.

No false representation. I bet there isn't a market for fake I.D.s on Illinois State's campus thanks to that rule.

Resisting a police officer carries a $500 fine in Normal. Having a mass gathering (i.e. a party) without a permit in Normal can cost anywhere from $100 to $1,000 in fines. Finally, littering, which can cost hundreds of dollars in fines if done on the highway, is a $25 fine in Normal.

The bottom line is that it seems like the Normal police have taken steps to discourage drinking by Illinois State students with a couple of harsh laws and steep fines, like the keg ordinance and keg fine. That may be one reason I never hear anyone say, "Let's go to ISU and party." There is a lot less to worry about when partying in Charleston.

So things in Normal, may not be so normal. Or are they?

Unique qualities are unappreciated

Apathy.
Lack of school spirit.
Low participation.

Any way you look at it or what ever you label it as, it comes out the same. A great part of the Eastern population has a bad attitude.

I am talking about having no pride whatsoever in our university, thus the diploma from which we will receive.

For four years now I have been hearing people complain about Eastern.

"Its cheap...its lame...we have poor quality instructors...the facilities are in bad condition," they say.

I usually hear such comments from students; therefore, I was a bit surprised earlier this summer to hear a professor say, "If you want a first rate education, go to a first rate school."

Fine. Go. Whether a student, faculty, or staff, if this university is below your standards then leave.

I'm not sure what is giving people the impression that Eastern is providing a less-than-quality education, especially since this idea goes against several recent studies.

One of the studies conducted by the university for the Board of Governors recently concluded that Eastern's graduation rates continue to exceed not only state, but also national averages.

Eastern also has the second highest graduation rate of all Illinois public universities.

Despite all the complaining, the results of a Student

Dana Phelps

Opinion Survey administered since 1989 show that graduating seniors are significantly more satisfied with their educational experience at Eastern than other schools across the nation.

Another survey indicates that 81 percent of entering students select Eastern more often because of its academic reputation than for its low cost.

Why?

Maybe because there are unique qualities of our school that we take for granted.

Maybe its because of our professor-student ratio and the availability of our instructors.

"Office hours?" one of my friends who attends University of Illinois once asked me when I tried to advise him on what to do about a difficult class.

Like most larger schools, at U of I you might never see your instructor the entire semester. He/she does not have office hours, is not "available at other times by appointment", and sends his grad assistant to class who also usually does not have office hours.

We are very fortunate to have the opportunity to speak one-to-one with our professors. When we get to know them on a personable level, it can not only help us while we are students, but also past graduation for references and recommendations.

Yes, "we only accepts interns from Big Ten schools" are words I have heard before.

Maybe if our attitudes would change and we would take more pride in our school, we could improve attitudes on and off campus, and we wouldn't have to feel discouraged by such comments.

Guest viewpoint

State government remains inefficient

• An editorial from the July 6, Daily Egyptian, Southern Illinois at Carbondale

Just when it finally appeared state lawmakers were going to reach an agreement for fiscal year 1993 on the June 30 deadline, something unfortunately familiar happened.

So familiar that it really should have come as no surprise. Once again a state budget remains undecided and Illinois has no authority to spend money or pay new bills because state lawmakers failed to overcome partisan politics.

Although the House and Senate could not agree on pressing issues such as the "granny tax," the cigarette tax and how to address the state's fiscal crisis, perhaps it should come as no surprise that the General Assembly did agree to adjourn until Wednesday so that lawmakers could enjoy a holiday weekend.

This extension of partisan bickering makes it even more difficult for legislators to build a coalition. Because they have missed the deadline, legislation will have to be adopted by a three-fifths majority in both chambers.

Taxpayers are caught in the middle as lawmakers continue to gridlock that is reminiscent of the Republican filibuster President Bill Clinton encountered when he attempted to pass his national economic package.

At the state level, however, Senate Democrats were unable to muster enough votes in their caucus to bring what was agreed upon as the comprised plan to a vote.

Regardless of which party is holding out, both sides could have avoided the stalemate if the last-minute budget work had been planned more efficiently.

Meanwhile, important issues remain up in the air. A controversial cigarette tax increase has come under fire from both parties, especially lawmakers in Southern Illinois.

Art secretary passes away

Aleta J. Donley, former secretary in the Art Department, died Sunday, July 4 at the Mattoon Health Care Center following a long illness.

"Eastern Illinois University has lost a dear friend and a valued employee," said James K. Johnson, Acting Dean of the College of Arts and Humanities and former chair of the Art Department.

During her tenure as secretary of the Art Department, Donley was actively involved with the daily operation of the department. According to Johnson, she assisted the department in achieving many of its goals including accreditation by the National Association of Schools of Art and Design.

"She had a sincere interest in the well being of the department's majors, student workers and the faculty," said Johnson. "Aleta was highly respected for her knowledge of university policies and procedures and was often sought after for advice from all segments of the university."

In addition to her secretarial and administrative responsibilities, ties, Donley was a key organizer of the Annual Christmas Art Sale. Under her leadership the art sale has generated over $7,000 for student scholarships since it started in 1987.

"She was truly a caring person. She wasn't just a supervisor, she was a dear friend. Everyone in the department, including faculty and students, had such a great deal of respect for her," said Angela Winnett, a co-worker in the Art Department.

Janet Fraembs of the Lumpkin College of Business and Applied Arts who worked with Donley on the Office Staff Support Group said, "Aleta was one of the key organizers of the group in 1988 and served as its first chair. She provided the group with a lot of bright ideas and was thought very well of by her peers on campus. She was just a very special person with a wonderful sense of humor. She will be missed very much!"

"Aleta was highly respected by people throughout the university community. She was just one of those individuals who enhanced the lives of all those she came in contact with. Aleta will be greatly missed not only by the faculty and staff of the Art Department, but also her colleagues across campus," Johnson said.

Donley was employed at Eastern Illinois University from the Spring of 1986 to January of 1992. She is survived by her husband Don, two children and seven grandchildren.

Negotiators meet to tie up loose ends

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Gov. Jim Edgar and legislative leaders were set to tie up what they called loose ends after agreeing to a budget framework that they planned to pitch to rank-and-file lawmakers this week.

Budget negotiators agreed to a tentative plan Saturday and staff members drafted the bill Saturday night. The plan mirrors much of a tentative budget agreement that fell apart last week.

It calls for a 14-cent a pack tax on cigarettes, renewal of the state's income-tax surcharge and a $10-a-month increase for two- and three-member families who receive welfare.

The negotiators still were discussing how to shift $205 million from Edgar's original budget proposal. The changes will be a combination of cuts and shifting money from some programs to others.

"Overall, all the tough decisions have been agreed to and we are very near," Edgar said after Saturday's two hour session.

Sen. Penny L. Severns, D-Decatur, lead budget negotiator for the Senate Democrats, said leaders also needed to discuss statewide capital projects.

Capital projects include funds for libraries, city buildings, municipal buildings and the like.

When a final agreement is reached, the leaders will pitch the plan to rank-and-file lawmakers. A vote could come as early as Monday afternoon and lawmakers could adjourn for the summer after that.

The proposed 14-cent-cigarette tax — which House Speaker Michael Madigan repeatedly said he did not have the votes for — would help replace the so-called "granny tax" — a $6.30-a-day levy on some nursing home residents.

Iraq stops U.N. effort to seal missile sites

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq barred U.N. weapons inspectors from sealing two missile test sites Sunday, escalating the West's latest confrontation with Saddam Hussein and touching off fears of military retaliation.

After the abrupt departure of a U.N. inspection team, many Iraqis went home early and most stores were emptied of vegetable, fruit and meat in hours as residents stocked up.

Baghdad hotels advised residents to go to basement bomb shelters if air raid sirens sound.

Vice President Gore said: "Saddam should understand very clearly that he cannot trifle with the world community." Speaking on the NBC's "Meet the Press," Gore said the United Nations could now demand Saddam destroy the sites. If he doesn't, U.N. forces may be called in to destroy them, Gore said.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher also has warned Western allies could resort to force if Iraq fails to comply with Persian Gulf War cease-fire resolutions requiring destruction of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

The inspectors arrived Saturday to seal the sites after Iraq refused to allow a U.N. team to install surveillance cameras at the two missile testings areas south of Baghdad. The seals would have to be broken in order to use the equipment.

Iraq charges the cameras infringe on its sovereignty and has insisted on something in return, such as an easing of U.N. sanctions that have prevented Iraq from selling oil or importing goods.

In New York, Rolf Ekeus, chairman of the U.N. Special Commission charged with dismantling Iraq's arsenal, told The Associated Press he would consult Sunday with Sir David Hannay of Britain, head of the U.N. Security Council. Ekeus said he probably would brief the full 15-nation council on Monday.

He said it would be up to the Security Council to decide how to proceed, but noted that it already had warned of "serious consequences" if Iraq continued its defiance of weapons inspectors.

Tim Trevan, spokesman for the Special Commission, told the AP in New York that the United Nations will officially ask Iraq why it didn't allow the sealing.

On Jan. 17, after Iraq blocked U.N. inspection flights, the United States fired a missile barrage at a Baghdad factory linked to the nuclear weapons program.

Iraq asked the Security Council to prevent any punitive raid.

"Iraq calls on the Security Council to shoulder its responsibilities in accordance with the United Nations charter and prevent the launching of a new military aggression against it," the communique said.

Tons of relief rots in Mogadishu

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Hundreds of tons of food destined for the famished interior are rotting as military action against warlord Mohamed Farah Aidid diverts U.N. troops from escorting convoys, aid agencies said Sunday.

In a joint statement, the 20 relief groups pleaded with U.N. forces to devote more of their manpower and resources to assisting delivery of food and other humanitarian aid.

The troops have been concentrating on restoring order to southern Mogadishu, where fighters of Aidid have launched ambushes on U.N. peacekeepers.

Meanwhile, more than 800 tons of corn and soy products have been waiting at the port for up to 10 days, exposed to intense heat and humidity, the private agencies said.

Most of the rotting food was loaded more than a week ago on 52 trucks and 10 trailers hired by the U.N. World Food Program and the Catholic Relief Service.

In their statement, the agencies called on U.N. forces "to create a secure environment" for the delivery of aid to the countryside.

There was "an almost total lack of military escorts and convoys in support of humanitarian programs outside Mogadishu," they said.

The agencies expressed the fear that military objectives were taking priority over humanitarian ones and aid workers were operating virtually without protection.

In the past month, travel on all main routes from Mogadishu became "extremely dangerous" and aid programs more than ever before were in danger of grinding to a halt, they said.

U.N. officials say units normally used for convoy duty have been reassigned to the Mogadishu operation.

"There has been a problem with the convoys. There have been other assignments," said U.N. spokesman Barrie Walkley.

But convoys were scheduled to resume Monday and continue regular departures from Mogadishu three times a week, Walkley said.

Analysts see too many gambling boats

GARY, Ind. (AP) — Riverboat gambling along the Indiana shore of Lake Michigan could face problems because of competition from Illinois-based casinos, some gaming analysts say.

The Indiana General Assembly last month approved five riverboat casinos for Lake Michigan, five for the Ohio River and one at Patoka Lake in southern Indiana.

The Indiana boat operators will hope to draw from the Chicago metropolitan area, but the competition already is fierce. Joliet and Aurora, Ill., have two boats each, all within 90 minutes of northwest Indiana. There will be two more Joliet boats by the end of the year, and Chicago Mayor Richard Daley wants to land boats in Chicago.

Some analysts say that may be too many.

"Sounds like a lot of boats," said Anthony Curtis, publisher of Las Vegas Advisor, a gaming industry publication.

Marvin Roffman, a gaming consultant based in Philadelphia, said the upper Midwest is in a euphoric stage.

"Everyone is enthusiastic looking at the numbers the boats are generating and multiplying it out per boat," Roffman said.

"Usually when things get real good they get overdone." In Mississippi, where there is unlimited riverboat gambling along the Mississippi River on the gulf waters, casino companies are looking with a wary eye, Roffman said.

"Promus (which owns Harrah's) already pulled out of a project they had mapped for Biloxi, Miss.," Roffman said.

William N. Thompson, a professor of public administration at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, said although he is pessimistic about boats in Indiana, "I'd like to be the first over Michigan City and catch the southwestern Michigan traffic." The legislation allows two boats in Grand Rapids, after referendums, one each for East Chicago and Hammond and one in either Michigan City or Portage.

"Let them go broke and figure out their own saturation," Thompson said.

The analysts said that with boats all over the greater Chicago area, some will begin feeding the immediate local communities.

And that, they say, isn't good.

Over the top

Charleston residents Tom Reynolds (right) and Jeff Stepp shoot some hoops at the Thomas courts Sunday afternoon.

White Sox, McDowell down Orioles while Cards, Cubs fall

BALTIMORE (AP) — Frank Thomas hit two homers and drove in five runs and Jack McDowell became the AL's first 13-game winner Sunday as the Chicago White Sox beat the Baltimore Orioles 11-5.

Bo Jackson had three RBIs and Ozzie Guillen also homered for the White Sox, who reached the All-Star break atop the AL West for the first time since 1984.

Thomas hit a three-run homer in the first inning and a two-run drive in the seventh, giving him 20. McDowell, Chicago's other player in Tuesday's All-Star game, allowed five runs and 10 hits in 7 1-3 innings.

McDowell (13-6) struck out four and walked two in ending a personal two-game losing streak. Roberto Hernandez got the last five outs.

The White Sox ruined starter Jamie Moyer's 17-inning shutout streak four pitches into the game. Steve Sax singled on a 1-0 pitch, Craig Grebek got a bunt single and Thomas followed with his 19th homer.

Moyer (5-4) allowed five runs and eight hits in 4 2-3 innings, suffering his first loss in seven starts since May 30.

Baltimore closed to 3-2 in the fourth when Harold Baines walked and Cal Ripken hit his 12th home run. But Chicago added two runs in the fifth when Moyer walked the bases loaded with two outs and Jackson lined a two-run single to left.

Rockies 4, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Armando Reynoso allowed five hits in seven-plus innings as the Colorado Rockies beat St. Louis 4-1 Sunday and kept the Cardinals from moving up on Philadelphia in the NL East.

St. Louis, which lost two of three to the expansion Rockies, could have moved to just four games behind the division-leading Phillies, who lost 10-2 to San Francisco.

Colorado won for the seventh time in 10 games overall and the eighth time in Reynoso's last 10 starts. Reynoso (7-4), who struck out two and walked one, didn't allow a runner past second base until the seventh. Steve Reed pitched two hitless innings for his first career save, striking out four.

Bob Tewksbury (9-7), who had won his previous five decisions, lost a bid to become the first Cardinals pitcher since 1985 to win 10 games before the All-Star break. He allowed two runs and seven hits in eight innings, matched his career high with eight strikeouts and didn't walk a batter, extending his streak without a walk to 42 innings.

Astros 11, Cubs 1

CHICAGO (AP) — Mark Portugal and two relievers combined on a three-hitter, and Eric Anthony hit a three-run homer in a six-run sixth inning Sunday as the Houston Astros beat the Chicago Cubs 10-1.

Portugal (7-4) allowed one run and two hits, struck out four and walked five in seven-plus innings. Tom Edens finished the eighth, and Doug Jones pitched a one-hit ninth.

Errors by third baseman Eric Yelding and right fielder Candy Maldonado led to six unearned runs in the sixth. Greg Hibbard (7-6) allowed three hits in six innings, struck out two and walked three.

With Chicago leading 1-0, Andujar Cedenio singled leading off the sixth. One out later, Craig Biggio hit a grounder that Yelding threw into right field for an error. When Maldonado overran the ball, Cedenio scored the tying run and Biggio took third.

After an infield out, Jeff Bagwell walked and Ken Caminiti hit a two-run double. Chris James was intentionally walked, and Anthony followed with his seventh home run for a 6-1 lead.

All-Star moments will define Tuesday's classic

BALTIMORE (AP) — Pete Rose's collision with Ray Fosse. Reggie Jackson's drive into the light tower. Bo Jackson's leadoff home run.

More than All-Star players, the All-Star game means All-Star moments.

Old film clips of Ted Williams jumping around the bases. The image of Carl Hubbell striking out future Hall of Famers Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Jimmie Foxx, Al Simmons and Joe Cronin in succession.

The final scores may be forgotten. So might the result. Who won, that's not what we remember.

Most times, there's no way to know when that defining moment will come. Who knew the Americans would get a record seven straight hits off Tom Glavine in the first inning last July in San Diego? There is, however, a memory waiting to happen Tuesday night at Camden Yards.

Out beyond the right-field fence, over the Esskay Franks billboard on the 25-foot high scoreboard and across Eutaw Street, it's ready.

The red-bricked B&O Warehouse, built by the Baltimore and Ohio railroad in 1899, is the single most attractive feature of the ballpark. It is nearly 10 stories high and is parallel to the wall, running from center field to past the right-field foul pole.

And ever since the Orioles' park opened last season, the warehouse has been waiting to be hit.

At its closest point, the warehouse is 432 feet from home plate.

Mickey Tettleton has come the closest to banging one off the bricks, coming within 26 feet just two weeks after the stadium opened.

Last month, Tettleton again got close, hitting a drive that landed on Eutaw Street, bounced past Boog Powell's barbecue pit and skipped off the warehouse.

Texas' Kevin Reimer and California's Lee Stevens also came close to reaching the building on a fly. Their drives, along with Tettleton's shot, are marked with bronze baseballs embedded in the street.

Tettleton was left off this year's All-Star team, even though the Detroit switch-hitter leads the AL in home runs and is second in RBIs. He's one of the few lefties in the majors with enough power to go that deep.

There will be, however, a few others who could do it, particularly if it's hot and the ball is carrying, like it's supposed to be Tuesday night. Just imagine how neat it would be, and how many times CBS-TV would replay it, if someone managed to bank a ball off the building.

Lefties Barry Bonds and Ken Griffey Jr. might be able to reach it. So might David Justice, Bob Bonilla and Darren Daulton. But Cecil Fielder and Juan Gonzalez, who hit them as far as anyone, are right-handed and rarely hit them that far that way.

For almost all of the NL players, it will be their first look at Camden Yards.

"The warehouse? What is the warehouse?" Bonds asked.

Many of the other NL All-Stars are eager to see baseball's newest stadium.

"I've never been there before, but I've heard a lot about it," Daulton said. "From what I've heard and what other players tell me, that's the place to be. Even American Leaguers who play in the park every year want to return."

"You see the ball good there and it really flies out of that place," Cleveland's Carlos Baerga said. "I've struggled there in the past, but always look forward to playing there during the season." No player has hit the warehouse during batting practice, probably because even power hitters need to bat against a pitcher with some pop to hit it that far to straightaway right.

Even so, players on both teams are sure to be swinging that way during Monday's workouts. There also will be a home run derby later in the day featuring Fielder, Griffey, Gonzalez, Bonilla and Justice. Then there's the game itself.

By the way, there's one other person who will be taking a few swings on Monday. He's not an All-Star, not a baseball player and doesn't even bat left-handed.

But he has performed some incredible feats in sports and provided moments that have been becoming memories. Which is why everyone will be watching Monday's celebrity home run derby when, up to the plate, steps Michael Jordan.
