DRILL TEAM PLACES FIRST

Each team had to perform an eight to ten minute routine. Teams were judged by two active Army and two active Marine judges on criteria such as the complexity of movement, difficulty, and originality of routine.

"Being on the squad builds teamwork, which every part of the military needs, It's also an exercise in discipline and leadership. This is an extra-curricular activity; they do it on their own time," noted Captain Vance Chartier, Drill Team Admiral and ROTC Staff Member, at Eastern, adding that the team practices an average of six hours a week.

Eastern's team competed in the Class B level, which is for less experienced teams, but will now advance to Class A.
