Meghann Crowder, a sophomore sociology major, takes advantage of the free newspapers Monday morning in the lobby of Taylor Hall. Crowder took a copy of the Charleston Times Courier, USA Today, and The Chicago Tribune which are the three newspapers involved in the Readership Program.

Newspaper program debuts

By Shauna Gustafson and Chris Sievers
Staff writers

On the day of its debut, the Readership Program was deemed successful, with almost all the free papers picked up before noon.

The newspaper program, organized by Cortney McDermott, student vice president for academic affairs, began Monday at Taylor Hall, McKinney Hall, and Lincoln, Stevenson and Douglas halls. The Chicago Tribune, USA Today, and the Charleston Times Courier were available, in addition to the Daily Eastern News.

McDermott said she was pleased with the response from students.

"It was excellent," she said. "By 11:30 (a.m.), every paper was gone in all three halls."

McDermott said she could not estimate how many papers were brought to Eastern, but she said there were three bins full.

McDermott said she is hoping students will be receptive to the readership program.

"Today proved the students are interested in the newspaper program," she said.

She said a lot of students were not aware the program started Monday, but once they saw they were available, they picked them up.

"I just grabbed it because somebody told me they were down here," said Megan Stemm, a sophomore business management major.

McDermott also said students who picked up the newspapers were asked to fill out a survey for USA Today, which initiated the program nationwide. The surveys will be available for the remainder of the week.

Many students said the program was a good idea, and the newspapers would help them stay up to

UPI alleges negotiation rules violated

By Melanie Schneider
Administration editor

The administrative negotiating team Monday released information that violated rules of the negotiating process, claim officials of Eastern's chapter of the University Professionals of Illinois.

UPI officials say Jeanne Simpson, chief negotiator for the university, disclosed salary figures discussed during negotiations to her colleagues in a memo distributed Monday.

The letter stated, "The university bargaining team has offered a salary package of $1,532,680 in the first year of a new agreement."

David Radavich, UPI vice president and chief negotiator, responded to Simpson's memo in a letter and stated, "We are shocked that the administration has decided to violate the ground rules of our negotiating process. UPI had agreed with the administration's team, not to disclose offers made at the table."

Simpson declined comment on UPI's allegation until she consults her negotiating team.

Radavich also stated in the letter UPI chose not to disclose offers made at the table during a meeting with UPI's college and departmental leaders, which was held Sunday.

"Obviously, now, we feel compelled to break the silence and tell our membership the whole story," Radavich said.

He said the administration has been offering the same $1.5 million for four weeks or more.

"It is time that (Eastern) President (Carol) Surles makes a commitment for a clear, demonstrable and irreversible commitment to moving us from the lowest to the highest paid faculty and staff among our peer institutions," Radavich said.

Meeting to discuss strike process

By Tammie Sloup
News editor

Eastern's chapter of the University Professionals of Illinois today will hold a planning meeting to discuss the current state of negotiations as well as explain the process of striking.

The meeting, in part, stems from the abundance of questions union members have been recently asking regarding a strike.

The meeting will be held at 4 p.m. in Lumpkin Hall Room 122 and is open to all bargaining unit members.

Mitch Vogel, UPI Local 4100 Illinois Federation of Teachers - American Federation of Teachers - AFL-CIO, said union leaders are "confident" that negotiations will turn out successful, but others are not as optimistic and have begun to ask questions regarding a strike. He also said he was "surprised" at the number of union members who inquired about a strike.

Vogel said although union leaders would rather reach an agreement than strike, "we are prepared to explore the option."

Since 1984, strikes in Illinois have been legal as long as attempts are made at mediation, he said. And before Eastern's

Bar hours task force still lacking Eastern administrator

By Matt Neistein and Chris Sievers
Staff editors

Even though Mayor Dan Cougill said he was disappointed an Eastern administrator was not present for the first Task Force on Bar Extension Hours, few attempts have been made to recruit someone.

Cougill said at the meeting Thursday that the administration would be a key part of any solutions or programs the task force creates.

Will Brooks, Student Senate member and co-chair of the committee, said he is not sure who the administrator will be or if there will be one.

"I don't know," he said. "I'd hate to say right now."

Brooks said he has talked with Lou Hencken, vice president for student affairs, about filling the seat left vacant for an administrator, but nothing was decided.

"... We just talked about it casually," Brooks said.

The first meeting of the task force actually became a discussion of alcohol abuse and the criminal behavior it causes.

Cougill said this was an "acknowledgement" by the group of the issue at the core of the proposed bar hours extension.

"We're focusing on the real issue," he said.

Cougill said he initially expected the meeting to be a "stalemate," but was surprised by the results.

City Council originally voted on the idea Oct.

5, voting it down by a count of 3-2, but agreeing with senate representatives to reconsider the ordinance on Nov. 2 after the task force's formation.

However, Thursday night the task force decided to postpone the vote until an undetermined time next year in order to set up programs to combat alcohol abuse and alcohol-related crime.

Models' ovarian eggs auctioned

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Beautiful models offered their eggs for sale in an Internet auction Monday, touching off a fierce debate over the ethics of what is being called "Darwin at his very best."

Ronsangels.com, a Web site run by fashion photographer and Arabian horse breeder Ron Harris, is aimed at parents who want good-looking babies - and who would pay up to $150,000 for the privilege.

"It is distasteful, but it can't be stopped and it shouldn't be stopped. If people want to spend $150,000 for the eggs of a gorgeous woman who has an IQ of 68, let them," fertility expert Bill Handel said. Of the 5 million hits the site received by midday Monday, there were four or five bids for the three models featured, Harris said. At least one bid, for $42,000, appeared legitimate, he said.

The Web site contains glamorous photos of the women and boasts that the models are in excellent health. But no information about their intelligence, education or medical history was provided. Two of the models said they were single, one said she was married with a 5-year-old daughter.

Harris contends that being beautiful can lead to a successful life.

Task Force

Cougill said the vote will probably be delayed until late summer or early fall of 2000. That would give Eastern and the task force enough time to formulate solutions to city problems with student drinking, he said, as well as provide good weather for the ordinance's trial run.

The city previously said it would like to have a six-month test period to observe the effects of the ordinance on alcohol-related crime, which it is designed, in part, to reduce.

House parties are more commonly held during the warm months, Cougill said, and residents also tend to keep their windows open, making them more sensitive to loud parties and rowdy drinkers.

Both Brooks and Cougill agree that they do not want to set up the ordinance to fail.

"I think it is more beneficial to everyone that we make sure it is going to work," Brooks said.

Strike

chapter of UPI can strike, the previous contract between the union and the university must have expired.

Vogel also said an honest attempt at mediation must have been made, and if negotiations still are not successful, the Federal Conciliation and Mediation Services or the Illinois Education Labor Relations Board can, if requested, provide a federal mediator to meet with the university and the union.

A union must wait five days after these attempts before a strike can be called, he said. According to UPI's rules, a strike will not be called unless the majority of the members vote to strike. The vote is usually taken by secret ballot, he said.

"(UPI) has never called for a strike unless the vast majority (voted for it)," he said.

Vogel said the last vote came in 1991, with about 90 percent of the union voting to strike. But the administration compromised soon before the strike was to take place.

UPI and the university met for about 13 hours on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, but were unable to resolve contract negotiations. UPI's contract, which expired Aug. 31, was extended until today, and faculty and staff compensation is the most pressing issue causing the delay in finalizing contract negotiations.

relations and spokesperson for the university's bargaining team, said the university has offered what they believe to be fair compensation to faculty and staff.

"The university's bargaining team has offered what it considers to be an attractive salary package in line with the institution's resources in the first year of the new agreement," Flock said. "The offer includes a commitment to increase faculty salaries in the second and third years of the contract."

Flock also said it was in the university's interest to not overextend itself by committing new resources that it does not have or that it does not receive in the future from state allocations.

Another issue Simpson discussed in her letter was the university and UPI bargaining teams met on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, totaling about 15 hours. Radavich said in a previous written statement that "no progress was made on issues of critical importance to faculty and staff." Simpson responded to this in her letter by saying, "This statement appears to ignore the tentative agreement on the compensable fringe benefits articles of both the Unit A and Unit B agreements."

Radavich's and UPI President Sue Kaufman's response was that Simpson misunderstood the statement because the compensable fringe benefits were negotiated during Thursday's meeting, and Radavich made the comment, "no progress was made," in regards to the meetings held Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Flock said the university's bargaining team believes progress has been made to date on issues critical to faculty and staff, such as the

Ryan meets with Cuban opposition leaders

HAVANA (AP) - Illinois Gov. George Ryan on Monday said the United States should end its embargo against Cuba because many believe the trade sanctions are blocking democratic change on the island.

"The four ambassadors we met with felt that the embargo should be lifted, not only for the harm it does to the Cuban people but because it gives an excuse for Fidel Castro," Ryan told an impromptu news conference after the meetings.

"The dissidents we met with told us that lifting the embargo was the right way to go as well," Ryan added.

Critics of the sanctions have long said that Castro uses the embargo as a scapegoat for Cuba's economic ills. Those who continue to back the embargo after nearly four decades include a politically influential faction within Miami's Cuban exile community.

Cuba's state-controlled media depicted Ryan's five-day trip - the first by an American governor since the 1959 revolution - as a reflection of growing U.S. opposition to the trade embargo of Cuba, which took effect in 1962 to punish Castro's government.

fringe benefits which "includes sabbaticals and sick leave for annually-contracted faculty," Flock said.

"It is important to point out the university bargaining team has been forthright about its willingness to continue to meet and is committed to negotiating until an agreement that meets the best interests of the entire university is reached," Flock said. "The university's bargaining team has considered and addressed UPI's interests at the table, and we have every confidence we will achieve an agreement, but we are prepared for any action that UPI may take."

date with world events.

"I like (the program) a lot," said Brian Hodgkin, a freshman physical education major. "I love to see what is going on in the world."

Students flocked to the newspapers early this morning, and many of the newspapers were gone by mid-morning.

"It was really busy this morning," said Derek Howell, a junior physical education major. "Everybody reads the Daily Eastern News, I think just as many will read USA Today."

The program was greeted warmly by other students as well.

"It's a pretty good idea," said Joe Haykins, a freshman physics education major. "It's a way to keep up with things."

Amy Price, Taylor Hall resident director, said the program seems to be a good idea.

"I have heard positive things from students today," Price said. "I think they like it."

Price also said the main concern for many students would be the cost. She said the students wondered if they would have to pay for the program after the trial period.

"If we have to pay for it, I won't be able to read it on a daily basis because of money restraints," Hodgkin said.

One discouraging aspect of the program occurred when the halls began to run out of newspapers. McKinney Hall was the only hall that still had papers in the afternoon.

"The time I went to get one they were all gone," said Ricardo Jean-Pierre, a sophomore business management major.

Other students who could not get a newspaper of their own read those left in classrooms by other students.

"No, (there were not any left) I read one in class though," said Lori Coyle, a freshman elementary education major.

Kurt Marty, a junior industrial technology major and Taylor Hall resident assistant, said although he doesn't read those papers, he thinks it will be beneficial to students.

"It's a good idea," he said. "(The three papers) are good ones to read."

The readership program will be based on a trial period that will last for 30 days, McDermott said.

After the 30 days, McDermott and representatives from USA Today will look at the survey research that has been conducted from the start and the finish of the program.

"We'll have to look at the response," she said. "It is not automatic at all, it is based on student interest."

Eastern students proclaim beauty of fall

Eric Wolters / Staff photographer

Kyle Rubeck, sophomore history education major, walks underneath one of the ever-changing trees on his way to class last week. Some of the trees that offer the extra fall beauty are red maple, oak, ash and sweet gums.

Beautiful colors of changing trees inspire students, officials and faculty to enjoy scenery

By Geneva White
Campus editor

From the colorful leaves blanketing the Library Quad to the variety of shrubs and trees populating the campus, there is no doubt Eastern is a special place to be in the fall.

"I think this is a beautiful campus in the fall semester," said Lou Hencken, vice president for student affairs. "Each season is beautiful, but in particular fall is the best."

The many types of trees occupying the campus include oak, red maples, ash and sweet gums, said Jon Collins, superintendent of grounds.

"The prettiest are probably the sweet gums," Collins said. "We have a variety of trees that have color in them."

Gordon Tucker, associate professor of biology, said the variety of trees definitely contributes to the beauty of the campus.

"We have a large number of deciduous trees and shrubs planted on campus so we have real diversity," he said.

"We also (make) a real effort on our grounds keeping people to bring in different kinds of trees and shrubs to beautify the campus."

Each fall, Tucker takes his taxonomy class and wetland plants class on walks around campus to collect specimens and view the wonders of the season.

"One of the interesting features I point out to my students is the grove of ginkgo that grow on the main quad," he said.

"Usually ginkgo trees are planted individually on a street, but ours are planted in a natural setting and that adds a lot of interest or aesthetic appeal."

East Central Illinois area generally has more to offer in terms of appearance during the fall.

"I think this area is more attractive than some parts of the state because we do have some hills and topography you don't see up north," Tucker said.

Hencken said his favorite part of the campus during the fall is right outside his office window, which faces the area between the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union and Old Main.

"I happen to think I have one of the best views on campus," Hencken said. "I like it because all the flowers are here and the bigger trees."

One of those trees is about 300 years old, and like many trees on Eastern's campus, has been around before the university even existed, Hencken said.

For students, fall at Eastern means wearing sweatshirts and sitting outside on the quads enjoying the remaining good weather before winter sets in.

"I love all the trees," said Mark Davenport, a senior English major. "I love sitting out on the quad with my friends. We have so many beautiful trees."

Liz Gillespie, a junior special education major said fall is one of the best times of year because the temperatures are still tolerable.

"These last two days have been the prettiest days I've seen in a long time," she said.

Jean Cooper, a senior art education major said her favorite part of the campus during the fall is the North Quad.

"I like the landscape," she said. "I like the variety of trees."

Hencken, who has seen 35 years of Eastern falls both as a student and as an administrator, said the season is about more than appearance and weather.

"It's more than just the weather," he said. "Fall is when the students return and there's a lot of new students on campus."

Sentence of four years probation 'not justifiable' for hit and run driver

By Matt Neistein
City editor

The Eastern student who was the girlfriend of a Bloomingdale man killed in a hit and run accident in January in Charleston said the driver's recent sentencing of four years probation was unjustifiable.

John R. Warner, 24, of Lerna, pled innocent on March 29 to a charge of failing to report a fatal or injury accident, but changed his plea to guilty on Aug. 3.

Warner's car struck a group of pedestrians in the 1300 block of Fourth Street just after midnight on Jan. 17, including Stephen Grigsby, 22, of Bloomingdale, who was killed, and Elena Garza, an undecided major at Eastern, who was injured.

Believing he had hit an object, Warner fled the scene. The next day, he learned from news reports that pedestrians had been involved, and consulted a lawyer and reported the accident.

Three other Eastern students were involved as well: Albert Lopez, a sociology major, Lyndsy Paver, an elementary education major, and Tina Johnson, a family and consumer sciences major.

Johnson, Grigsby's girlfriend at the time, said she attended the hearing and was "surprised" at the sentence.

"Of course it's not justifiable," she said. "He killed someone."

The probation was the maximum sentence Warner could have received. In addition,

Circuit Judge Paul Komada Thursday sentenced him to 120 days on a work-release program through the Coles County Jail, 100 hours of community service, and ordered him to undergo alcohol evaluation and treatment.

He was also told not to consume alcohol or patronize any establishments that sells alcohol.

According to court reports, Warner said he had consumed four beers that night but was not drunk at the time of the accident, and therefore did not receive any alcohol-related charges from the grand jury investigating the matter.

He also has a driving under the influence conviction from 1996.

Charges such as reckless homicide or vehicular man-

“Of course it's not justifiable. He killed someone.”

Tina Johnson,
victim's former girlfriend

slaughter were not brought because Warner's crime was not reporting the accident, not the accident itself.

Warner claimed his windshield was fogged up and he was attempting to wipe it clear when the accident occurred. The group was walking in the street because the sidewalks were covered with snow.

Lecture to focus on leadership

By Shauna Gustafson
Staff writer

Stanley Ikenberry, president of the American Council on Education, will speak Wednesday as the keynote speaker for the inauguration of Eastern President Carol Surles.

The lecture will be held at 10 a.m. in the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union Grand Ballroom.

Ikenberry will talk about the challenge of leadership.

"We're very excited that he will be able to join us for inauguration activities," said Shelly Flock, director of media relations.

Flock said Ikenberry was previously president of the University of Illinois and was a leading spokes-person for American higher education.

"I would encourage all faculty, staff and students to come out and hear Dr. Ikenberry," Flock said. "We're just fortunate that with his busy schedule he can come to Eastern."

The lecture will be free and open to the public.

Creating a legacy

Earlier this semester an Eastern alumna generously donated a $1 million gift to the university, leaving no specifications on how the money should be used.

At Eastern's Board of Trustees meeting Oct. 18, President Carol Surles announced the gift from Florence Coles Ballenger would be used to support faculty development and establish the Florence Coles Ballenger Teacher's Center.

This was a good decision by the board because both students and faculty members will benefit from the funds. Ballenger's years at Eastern were the beginning of what became a life-long love of teaching and helping students realize their goals.

Teacher's center

Money left to Eastern by an alumna will be used to build a teacher's center to help retain and recruit faculty members.

After her death earlier this year, a friend and trustee of her estate, Helen Gilbert, said Ballenger would have liked to see the funds benefit students. Gilbert said Ballenger valued the education she received at Eastern and wanted the money used to promote education and benefit students.

A goal of the university recently has been to recruit and retain faculty at Eastern. Teshome Abebe, vice president for academic affairs, said faculty development is an important way to keep faculty members on campus.

The funding for faculty development will include necessary travel and other costs directly related to developmental activities a faculty member chooses or identifies as important.

The teaching center will be part of the renovated Booth Library when it opens. The center also will be the home kindergarten through 12th grade curriculum collection. There also will be access to electronic databases related to education and teaching. The center will have seating for a number of visitors to be used for forums and activities for area teachers and education students.

Teaching and education were an important part of Ballenger's life and she would be happy to see the money used this way. At a university that has many demands on its available money, it is encouraging to see administrators using the donation to benefit students and faculty.

Attendance policies can do some good

It's 7:40 a.m., your class starts in 20 minutes and you're still in bed. The problem is you were up all night writing a paper on two hours of sleep and you didn't read for class. What do you consider?

First, how many times have you skipped this 8 a.m. class? Can you get away without being called on in class? Does the professor like you? And finally, will the professor penalize your grade for skipping?

The last consideration usually determines the outcome for me.

One of the first things I look at when professors hand out their syllabi is the attendance policy. I can usually look around the room and see people nudging each other and smiling while pointing to the phrase, "There is no attendance policy in this class, but good attendance is encouraged."

A no attendance policy screams out "It's OK if you skip this class." Well, maybe not to everyone, but I definitely feel less guilty skipping if a professor doesn't penalize me for it.

But we're college students and we should just automatically go to class. We're all mature and can handle a lot more responsibility now that we're on our own. Right?

I will guarantee better attendance in classes that have a strict attendance policy. The concept is pretty obvious, but policies also will help students get into the habit of going to not only one particular class, but all their others.

As a freshman, the freedom of skipping class without my mom knowing about it was exciting, and I took advantage of it. I wish more of my classes had attendance policies because I fell into a really bad habit of missing them. One could argue that if students miss a lot of class, they will most likely fail anyway, which is a penalty in itself. But again, I don't see how an attendance policy can disadvantage a student's learning experience, only enhance it.

My current and former professors are probably thinking

Tammie Sloup
News editor

"Some professors say we're old enough to figure out we need to go to class, and one of my professors even said 'just try to be a good student.'"

"practice what you preach" by this point because I am hardly an advocate for attending classes, but the point of this column is not to point my finger at students and tell them they better go to class. It is to encourage professors to enforce attendance policies because I think they can only benefit students.

I'll admit it, I do skip classes with attendance policies, but I can say I skip them a lot less than the classes I have without policies. And not surprisingly, my grades are higher in those courses. I'm aware it's not professors' responsibility to make students come to class; we're the ones paying for the education.

My question is why not draw up some type of policy? I don't see how it can hurt. Some professors say we're old enough to figure out we need to go to class, and one of my professors even said "just try to be a good student." He was right. We should all strive to be the best students we can be, but sometimes we all need a little push.

An acquaintance of mine told me she doesn't believe in attendance policies because she wants the option of going to class without being penalized. She also told me she learns more by reading the textbook rather than going to class and listening to someone lecture about it. Maybe I'm lucky, but I've never had a class where lectures are all based off of the required reading, and professors who base their courses solely off of outside reading should probably think twice about their teaching methods.

Also, if students believe they learn more about class material on their own and outside of class, excluding research and extracurricular activities, maybe Eastern isn't challenging enough and they should consider transferring to a university where their degree actually means something, and is not merely something they paid for.

Media are ignoring the East Timor situation

When an estimated 2,000 people had been killed in Kosovo, the United States called it ethnic cleansing, then threatened military force and finally bombed Yugoslavia for over two months. When 100 times that number have been killed in East Timor, the U.S. response is much more muted. There are no threats to bomb Jakarta or invade Indonesia.

I was somewhat surprised to actually notice mention of this double standard in the U.S. media. Usually they just ignore inconvenient facts like this. However, they attempt to rationalize this double standard by explanations like it is because of oversights, mistakes, fickleness, absentmindedness or even stupidity. The people who pay the politicians' campaign expenses and who own and control so much of this planet's resources are not absentminded, nor are they stupid. Yugoslavia was bombed because it was the last socialist state in Europe and was failing to implement the IMF austerity measures and privatize and deregulate all state-owned enterprises, including their media system. Indonesia is not bombed because it is a capitalist country and has invited in many American-based multinational corporations like Nike, which take advantage of the very cheap labor. Also, Suharto destroyed the Indonesian Communist Party in 1965 in one of the greatest slaughters of the 20th century, killing an estimates 1 million people. Incidentally, lists of dissidents to be executed were provided to the Indonesians by the American embassy. These things have made Indonesia a very valued ally of the United States and very unlikely to be bombed. Of course, this explanation can never be given to the American people in the major media. It is too logical and consistent with history and might actually influence a few people.

Your turn Letters to the editor

Letter policy

The Daily Eastern News accepts letters to the editor addressing local, state, national and international issues. They should be less than 250 words and include the author's name, telephone number and address. Students should indicate their year in school and major. Faculty, administration and staff should indicate their position and department. Letters whose authors cannot be verified will not be printed. Depending on space constraints, we may have to edit your letter, so keep it as concise as possible.

Combating racism focus of discussion

By Amanda Martinez
Staff writer

Members of the campus community are being called upon tonight to address the problem of racism and discuss how to eliminate it from Eastern's campus.

Liz Halbert, a senior speech communications major who established the Eastern chapter of "Not In Our Town," will host the meeting at 9 p.m. in the walkway of the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union.

Students, faculty and administrators will be asked for ideas of how to combat racism at Eastern.

Halbert said she has been the victim of racially motivated incidents at Eastern and in Charleston.

The most recent was when she was driving and another motorist yelled a racial slur at her, she said.

"The hate crime incident in Charleston was the last straw for me," Halbert said. "Something needs to be done."

Halbert said she wants to figure out what needs to be done on

“ We should not wait for a major incident to occur, but rather be proactive before (racism and diversity) gets worse.

” Eastern's campus in order to stop racially motivated incidents.

"A legitimate issue is something that is talked about and addressed," she said. "A strain is something that is a problem, but is just ignored and not talked about. Race relations and diversity are strains."

Halbert said something needs to be done about the problem of racism before it progressively gets worse on Eastern's campus.

"We should not wait for a major incident to occur, but rather be proactive before (racism and diversity) gets worse," Halbert said.

Workshop to unveil mysteries of dating

By Layton Cooper
Staff writer

A workshop presenting information on what to look for in potential dates and hints on the type of people that will not be compatible will be held tonight.

The workshop, "Playing the Game," will be held at 7 p.m. in the Grand Ballroom of the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union.

The Counseling Center will be presenting the workshop, and Karola Alford and Linda Anderson, both from the counseling center, will host the workshop.

The game show format from the popular television program "The Dating Game," will be used to help students recognize some early warning signs in relationships.

An interactive version of the game show will be recreated in order to show some traits to look for in dating.

The focus of the game will be to show the importance of listening to what your partner is saying in a relationship.

The roles of the game show host and the contestants will both be played by Eastern students, but some contestants from the audience may be chosen.

Both Alford and Anderson said they hope students will have a good time and that students will learn something.

The workshop is free and all are encouraged to attend.

Fall Forum agenda to address concerns

By Jason Maholy
Staff writer

The Faculty Senate Tuesday will continue to prepare its agenda for the Nov. 9 Fall Forum to address faculty concerns.

Faculty Senate will meet at 2 p.m. in Buzzard Hall room 2504.

Bonnie Irwin, chair of Faculty Senate, said a flyer regarding the issues slated to be covered at the forum, has been drafted and will be reviewed and possibly modified.

Once a consensus has been reached, the flyer will be sent to all members of Eastern's faculty.

"We know what issues we're going to be focusing on, now its just about trying to put them into logical order," Irwin said.

She also said the senate will be discussing committee reports and the results of its faculty survey.

Organizations compete in best non-alcoholic cocktail contest

Lalanobooza held in Taylor Hall tonight

By Susan Chinnock
Staff writer

The Taylor Hall lobby will become an alcohol-free bar tonight when seven organizations compete to create the perfect "mocktail."

Lalanobooza will kick off at 7 p.m. as part of Alcohol Awareness Week and will involve making mocktails, non-alcoholic beverages.

Bacchus, Delta Zeta, Eta Sigma Gamma, Pi Kappa Alpha, Lambda Zeta Phi, Kappa Delta and Delta Sigma Phi are participating in the Alpha Gamma Delta sponsored event.

Mocktails will be judged on originality, name creativity, taste, appearance and overall rating, said Kayla Ramsey, vice president for campus relations for Alpha Gamma Delta. Four judges will vote on the winning drink to be entered into the National Bacchus-Gamma Competition in Florida.

Each group will offer a recipe card for their creation to encourage students to make their own mocktails.

"I think it is important for people on campus to know you don't have to drink to have a good time," Ramsey said.

Lalanobooza is intended to encourage students to drink responsibly, she said.

"The main purpose is one to get different campus segments involved in our awareness week," said Eric Davidson, assistant director of health education and promotion.

Davidson said the competition is a social alternative designed to promote the use of non-alcoholic beverages at parties and other social functions.

"It promotes responsible decision making and looks at the role alcohol plays in life and behavior change," Davidson said.

Ramsey said she does not think the program would work by itself, but with the other activities for Alcohol Awareness Week, she thinks it will have an impact.

Impacts of alcohol on display at Union

Students share experiences through stories

By Geneva White
Campus editor

Examples of negative impacts alcohol has on college students will be on display today in the walkway of the Martin Luther King Jr. University Union as part of Alcohol Awareness Week.

On Thursday, Peer Education And Community Enhancement began having students in residence halls, the Rec Center and the Health Education Resource Center write on construction paper bricks about how alcohol has affected their lives. The bricks have been made into a wall that will be put up today in the University Union.

The wall will include stories about people who have lost friends and loved ones to drunk driving accidents, embarrassing stories about things they have witnessed others do when they drink and stories about how alcohol affects family and friends.

"Almost everyone at Eastern has somehow been impacted or known someone who has been seriously injured or died from alcohol-related incidents," said Angela Gburek, a member of PEACE. "Alcohol does touch everyone in some way."

Gburek said having the wall also will show the harmful effects of alcohol to faculty and staff.

In addition to the stories, alcohol statistics also will be displayed. More than 200 students have done bricks for the wall.

"Pretty much everyone has a story (about alcohol) to tell and that's what I've learned by putting together this project," Gburek said.

Other Alcohol Awareness Week events planned for this week include Lalanobooza, a mocktail competition tonight in the Taylor Hall lobby and a speech on college drinking games Thursday at 6 p.m. in Phipps Lecture Hall.

Prayer powers patients back to health faster, study finds

CHICAGO (AP) — Heart patients who were prayed for — without their knowledge — suffered significantly fewer complications than those who were not prayed for, according to new research that supports a similar study more than a decade ago.

“The data are most consistent with the conclusion that God answers prayer,” said lead author William S. Harris, a heart researcher at the Mid America Heart Institute, where the study was conducted. “That’s not a mechanism. That doesn’t explain what happened. But it’s the simplest conclusion to draw from the data.”

The researchers studied 990 patients admitted over a year’s time to the institute’s coronary care unit and randomly divided them into two groups. In one, patients were prayed for daily by community volunteers for four weeks; the other patients were not.

The patients, their families and their caregivers were not told which group they were in, and they were not told they were in a study.

The volunteers had no special training. They were recruited through personal contacts in the local community, belonged to diverse Christian traditions and were told only the first names of the patients. The volunteers were asked to pray daily for the patients’ “speedy recovery with no complications” and anything else that seemed appropriate.

After four weeks, the prayed-for patients had suffered about 10 percent fewer complications, ranging from chest pain to cardiac arrest, researchers reported in Monday’s issue of the American Medical Association’s Archives of Internal Medicine.

The finding suggests that prayer might be an effective addition to standard medical care, the researchers said.

“We need to make it clear that we were studying prayer. We weren’t studying God,” Harris added in a telephone interview Monday. “We have not proven that God exists. We have not proven that God answers prayer. The observations that we’ve made are consistent with God answering prayer. They support that idea.”

Researchers say exercise may reduce risk of breast cancer by 20 percent

CHICAGO (AP) — One of the largest studies on the topic to date has found that women who exercise an hour a day or more may reduce their risk of breast cancer by 20 percent.

The findings, published in Monday’s Archives of Internal Medicine, add to the growing evidence that exercise can be a factor in preventing breast cancer — particularly among older women, who are most likely to contract the disease.

A smaller 1997 study in Norway found that women who exercised at least four hours a week were about a third less likely to contract breast cancer.

“All the evidence suggests that there’s nothing to lose by women being physically active,” said Beverly Rockhill, lead author of the most recent study and a researcher at Brigham and Women’s Hospital in Boston.

Researchers believe exercise may affect breast cancer because it lessens the level of estrogen circulating in a woman’s body. Estrogen has been found to stimulate breast cell growth and, thus, increases the chances of cancerous growth in breast tissue, Rockhill said.

The findings of the latest study were based on the analysis of questionnaires from 121,701 women nationwide who participated in the Nurses’ Health Study, a long-term health survey of women ages 30 to 55. Specifically, Rockhill and her colleagues looked at data from 1980 to 1994, comparing the women’s exercise habits and the prevalence of breast cancer.

They found 3,137 cases of breast cancer among the 85,364 women who answered questions about physical activity. Of those, they found that 20 percent fewer of women who exercised an average of once a day or more got breast cancer, compared with those who exercised less than an hour a week.

The exercise included brisk walking and jogging but did not include things like housework or gardening.

The researchers adjusted their data for factors such as weight and hormone use but not for diet and smoking, since neither factor appeared to be that different among active and inactive women, Rockhill said.

While a 20 percent reduction sounds like a lot, Rockhill called the risk reduction “modest.”

“When you think about it, that still means that 80 percent of cases are not being affected by this,” Rockhill said.

Regardless, Louise Brinton, chief of the environmental epidemiology branch at the National Cancer Institute, applauded the study. She said the findings were more likely to be accurate than some other studies because the women were asked about their exercise habits when they were actually exercising.

Retrial delay may give inmate his freedom

CHICAGO (AP) — A man convicted twice of burning a Chicago tavern owner to death may go free because the Illinois Appellate Court waited nearly a year to send the case back for a retrial after the original verdict was overturned.

Anthony Crane, now 36, was sentenced to life in prison in 1991 for setting a fire that engulfed 61-year-old William McHugh at his bar on Chicago’s South Side.

The conviction was overturned on grounds that his arrest was improper. And Crane, who had been a bartender at the tavern, was granted a retrial.

He was convicted again in 1997 and appealed again — partially on grounds that he’d been denied his constitutional right to a speedy retrial.

“Dismissal of the case and release from prison is an extreme remedy, but it’s the only remedy,” said Patricia Mysza, an assistant Cook County public defender, who handled Crane’s appeal. “It’s an unusual situation, and sometimes there is a price to pay.”

A three-judge Appellate Court panel apparently agreed, ruling last month to dismiss the case.

Lawyers from the Cook County state’s attorney’s office are appealing the dismissal to the Illinois Supreme Court.

At issue is the amount of time it took for the Appellate Court clerk’s office to issue an order for retrial after the first verdict was overturned in February 1994.

“Dismissal of the case and release from prison is an extreme remedy, but it’s the only remedy.”

Patricia Mysza, an assistant Cook County public defender

The case was sent back to trial court in February 1995.

Some lawyers say the problem stemmed from a clerical error. Others say it was simply a matter of red tape.

An official in the clerk’s office, who asked not to be identified, told the Chicago Tribune the delay was “an embarrassment” that was apparently the result of poor communication.

Rene Goldfarb, head of the Cook County state’s attorney’s appeals division, placed the blame squarely on the appeals court clerk’s office.

“They totally blew it,” she said. “I’ve never seen anything like it.”

But Gilbert Marchman, the court’s chief clerk, denied that the problem was his.

“No mistake was made — none,” Marchman said. “It’s not my responsibility. I’m just a keeper of records. It’s the responsibility of the attorneys in the case.”

He said delays of up to 18 months were not unheard of.

Sophomore versatility

Kim DeMage uses consistency to earn a spot on the floor

By Troy Hinkel
Staff writer

It is always nice to have an athlete that can do multiple things for your team. Eastern's volleyball team has this in Kim DeMage, a sophomore outside hitter from Red Bud.

DeMage quickly became a factor in the Ohio Valley Conference last season as she was named Freshman of the Week in November and then later was named to the All-Newcomer Team for the OVC.

"Kim is probably one of the most consistent and smartest players on the team," said outside hitter Meleah Cutler. "She has more confidence over last year and her blocking ability has gotten better."

DeMage's numbers continue to go up as the season progresses. DeMage contributed 13 kills and four block assists in an important come-from-behind victory over Tennessee Tech this past weekend.

"Kim is very consistent and the fact that she does not make a lot of errors is an important factor," interim coach Andrew Epperly said.

"She does not hit the hardest on the team, but she plays steady."

Her steady play may be needed Tuesday night as Eastern (14-7) travels to Chicago to play the DePaul Blue Demons (14-9), where DePaul is undefeated at home this year with a perfect 9-0 record.

The trip gives Eastern a conference break after playing five straight OVC matches in which Eastern went 4-1.

It also gives the Panthers the chance to improve on their non-conference record of 5-5.

"I don't think we have a let down

Sophomore outside hitter Kim DeMage goes up for a block in Saturday's win over Tennessee Tech. DeMage has been putting up solid numbers for Eastern.

when playing non-conference opponents, it's just our non-conference competition has been very strong this year," Epperly said.

The Blue Demons enter Tuesday night's match on a six-match win streak that has helped them eclipse their win total of eleven from last season.

DePaul, who won five matches in Conference-USA last season, has a 7-3 record in tough conference competition this year.

"DePaul is a much improved team from the beginning of the season," Epperly said.

"They just recently defeated the University of Houston who is ranked No. 2 in their district."

DePaul has also beaten the University of Chicago and University of St. Louis, both of which Eastern has lost to in five games this year.

On its thirteen-player roster, DePaul has only three upper classman on the squad and they play in only limited roles.

The Blue Demons are led by sophomore Stephanie Bishop who received Division I National Player of the Week honors last week for her efforts in a match against UIC in which she compiled 35 kills and 27 digs.

Swimmers miss the celebration

By Todd Schreiber
Staff writer

After two days of swimming, six hours of driving from Cedar Falls, Iowa and some changing time, the Eastern swim team was left with a mere 20 minutes of Homecoming to celebrate.

The teams competed in the Northern Iowa Invitational, where the women's team finished second and the men's team third. Although the teams were not victorious, head coach Ray Padovan felt that the meet was a success for his teams.

"It was a good swim for us," he said, "(With the two days of swimming) it was an exceptionally beneficial weekend."

The women's team was paced by junior Amanda Dore, who claimed two individual victories for the team.

Dore took the 100-yard freestyle for her first victory, she then showed some versatility by winning the 100-yard butterfly event. She also claimed a fourth-place finish in the 200-yard freestyle.

Another major scorer for the women's team was senior Amber Aurit. Aurit was nipped in the 100-yard backstroke by Andrea Newton of Truman State. She then recorded a second-place finish in the 200-individual medley and also posted a fourth-place finish in the 200-yard backstroke.

The 100-yard breaststroke was a solid event for the team, with Panthers placing three of the top eight finishers. Leading the way for Eastern was Courtney Werbe, who finished second. Senior Nancy Williams followed with a fourth-place finish and Jessica Kaatz finished eighth. Kaatz also finished second in the 200-yard breaststroke.

The men's team got off to a good start by taking the opening event, the 200-yard medley relay. Eastern then won four more individual events, but the lack of depth hurt the Panthers in the final scoring.

For the second straight week, freshman Josh Kercheval had an outstanding meet, winning three events for the team. His first win came in the 200-yard freestyle, which he won by over four seconds.

Kercheval then went on to win the 200-yard backstroke and the 200-yard individual medley.

Junior Luke Porritt recorded the other victory for Eastern by taking the 100-yard backstroke. Porritt also finished third in the 200-yard backstroke and fourth in the 100-yard butterfly.

The teams lost this weekend, but Padovan was extremely happy with the strides his team made in the week after their first meet.

"What we did compared to the week before was across the board seconds better," the coach said, "No one went flat on us, everyone performed well."

The team will now get ready to travel to Peoria where they will take on Bradley Friday evening.

Carrying on the Homecoming traditions

Homecoming. A time of traditions. Beer breakfasts. Tailgating. The parade. Over the years, all these events have evolved into traditions at Eastern and almost every other university around the country.

And, oh yeah, there was a football game too. And not surprisingly, another Eastern tradition was upheld at the game – bolting for the door as soon as the announcement of who this year's Homecoming King and Queen was made.

After the announcement was made, the mass exodus began. Almost instantaneously, people started filing for the exits. From where I was sitting, you would have thought the building was on fire.

Now, before I go any farther with this I have a confession to make. You caught me. I left early. I became one of the many to make an early exit. I didn't leave as early as most of the crowd, but I left early nonetheless.

At the point when I left, it was a 7-0 game. Both teams were obviously struggling somewhat. I'm sorry, but the game was just not that exciting. That, coupled with the fact that my extremities were turning blue, is what drove me away from the game.

I usually don't leave any sporting event until it is clear who is going to win. And I should not have left Saturday's game. Look what happened when I did.

I missed Tennessee Tech scoring 14 unanswered points in a 12 minute span. More action happened in the final 12 minutes than in the first three quarters and a lot of people didn't stick around to see the game unfold.

But I guess it wasn't all bad that the usual Homecoming race for the door occurred.

The Power Alley

Kyle Bauer
Sports editor
email: cukmb12@pen.eiu.edu

After all, it did clear up an entire section of the bleachers in the south end zone for my friends and I, who were dedicated and stayed to the bitter end.

That is no joke. An entire section got up and left in unison. So we took advantage of the extra elbow room. We had nobody sitting within five rows of us.

About this time, out of morbid curiosity, I walked to the top row of bleachers at O'Brien and looked out over to the tailgate area just to see if anything was still going on.

I'm not sure, but I think there was almost as many people still tailgating at that point than were in the stadium. The numbers were at least relatively close.

The point is that O'Brien sells out twice a year, once on parent's weekend and again on Homecoming. And you can't really count Homecoming as a sellout. Attendance at Saturday's game was 6,424. I would venture to say a good number of those fans were no where to be found as the game went down the stretch.

I realize not everybody left the game early and a lot of people are probably thinking that I'm blowing this whole thing out of proportion.

To those of you who stayed and braved the cold weather and a relatively dull first half, good for you. You finally got to see some action late in the game.

To those of you that braved the cold weather to see who was named King and Queen, I hope the game didn't get in your way too much.

And finally, to those of you that stuck around until the end of the third quarter and decided to leave, I can't blame you. I did the same thing.

I don't expect to see every single person stick around until the end of every single game.

What I was expecting to see was the football team receive more recognition than the King and Queen or the winners of the float contest.

But I guess that's wishful thinking for now.

Success

hitters and he wasn't afraid to pitch you inside. He was very, very tough and when you see that kind of effort it rubs off on you."

Creek, a 1963 graduate, holds the distinction of being the only Eastern pitcher to throw a nine-inning no hitter.

Dwaine Nelson, who graduated in 1975, is another pitcher on the list. Nelson is the career wins leader and is second in career strikeouts while having the second lowest single-season earned run average.

Mike Deese, a 1990 grad, rounds out the staff. Deese was named First Team All-Mid Continent Conference as a freshman and led the team in strikeouts two seasons, wins in 1990 and ERA in 1987. This pitching workhorse is also third in career wins and is the career leader in innings pitched with 275.1.

The catching honors go to John Burns, a 1968 grad who had outstanding defensive ability and had surprising speed for a catcher. Burns, who was drafted by the Braves in 1968, was known for his ability to handle the pitching staff and his five triples in 1968 places him third on the single-season list.

The Infield

Leading the infielders is first baseman Tim Pyznarski, a 1981 graduate who dominated pitchers during his three seasons at Eastern.

"Pyznarski was a Sporting News First Team All-American and the only Division II player on the club," McDevitt said. "He would hit the ball over the trees in center field."

The power hitting first baseman is the all-time home run leader with 36 and RBI leader with 156. The two-time Division II All-American is second on the single-season list for average, hitting .443 in '91 and second in hits with 77 in that same season. The 1981 first round draft pick by the Athletics eventually reached the big leagues and was a legend on Monier Field years after he was gone.

"He was a legend when I played there," said Jeff Jetel, a 1990 grad, said. "Someone would hit a home run to center and you would hear the name Pyznarski. Skip McDevitt would stand there and say, 'No, Pyznarski would have hit it over the trees.'"

Although he may be more well-known for his years in the NFL as a punter, Jeff Gossett is by far the most dominating shortstop in EIU history. The 1978 grad was drafted by the Mets and played two years in their farm system before trying his hand in the NFL. While Gossett doesn't hold a large amount of offensive records, he is forever remembered for his defense and canon of an arm.

"It was a pleasure to watch him throw," McDevitt said. "At the age of 32 he came into the fieldhouse and we played some catch and he said, 'Skip, do you have the radar gun still.'"

"I went and got it and he threw on the slow gun 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 99, 91, 92 and you still need to add four miles per hour to each of those," McDevitt said of the All-American shortstop. "I can't find guys in the major leagues who can throw from the outfield like Gossett and he was an infielder," the Cleveland Indians scout said. "If he and Shawon Dunston (a major league shortstop known for his powerful arm) went head-to-head, Dunston would lose."

Kevin Seitzer, a former major leaguer graduated in 1983 and was the most dominant third baseman to come through Charleston. Seitzer is the only hitter in Eastern history to hit .400 in three seasons, finishing with a .418 career average, which tops the record books.

Tim Bogar, a current infielder with the Houston Astros and 1987 graduate, only played two seasons at Eastern after transferring in. Bogar was the 1987 Mid-Con. MVP and hit for a .409 average in that season. Despite only playing two years at Eastern, he is third on the career home runs list with 17.

The Outfield

Leading the outfield is 1999 graduate Sean Lyons who holds the single season hits, doubles, runs and at bats records as well as the career record for doubles and runs scored.

"Sean's career stats really show his consistency and the quality baseball player he was for us," Schmitz said. "He came in as a shortstop his freshman year and we moved him to third a little bit but the whole program took off when we made the big move and put Sean in center field."

Lyons is joined by the brother tandem of Jeff and Jason Jetel. Jeff graduated in 1990 and was a senior when Jason walked on as a freshman.

"It was great playing with him," Jeff said of his brother. "We were the bookends of the outfield and he was definitely a hard-nosed ball player and was very intense."

Jason graduated in 1994 and believes the competitiveness with his brother is what helped him succeed.

"Growing up, he was always a grade or age level ahead of me, so I never got to play with him," Jason said. "We were very competitive growing up and were always trying to outdo each other."

Pat Rooney, a 1978 grad, rounds out the outfield. Rooney was drafted by the Expos after his senior season and reached the big leagues.

Specialties

Matt Legaspi, a talented 1992 graduate who played center field was selected as the designated hitter. Legaspi is second on the single-season doubles list while checking in as the career leader in hits and at bats while he was also second in career at bats and doubles.

"He was scrappy," Jason Jetel said. "He had a very strong arm and was the anchor of the defense in center field."

Stan Royer, who graduated in 1988 and was drafted by the Athletics, was selected as the utility player seeing action at both first, third and catcher both at Eastern and in the pros.

"He was very polished from the first day I saw him," Jeff Jetel said. "He was a very competitive ball player and carried himself like a big league ball player."

The coach

The nod for coach of the century goes to none other than McDevitt who compiled a 299-187-3 record during his 11 seasons at the helm between 1978-88.

Despite possessing a great baseball mastermind, McDevitt gives all the credit to his players.

"I was fortunate, I had only one scholarship but I had the players," he said. "It is the ball players that make the coach not the other way around."

So with a full century of baseball on the verge of coming to a close, the Panther baseball program has many strong years ahead of it. And after the program was placed back on the map at the national level last year after the team's NCAA Regional appearance, the future looks everything but dim.

"Last year was one of those dream seasons and hopefully we can do that in the next millennium," Schmitz said. "We've got a good start and hopefully we can keep that going and get a couple more of those dream seasons."

Stewart dies in plane crash

MINA, S.D. (AP) — A Learjet carrying champion golfer Payne Stewart and at least four other people flew a ghostly journey halfway across the country Monday, its windows iced over and its occupants apparently incapacitated, before nosediving into a grassy field. Everyone aboard was killed.

The chartered, twin-engine Lear 35 may have suddenly lost cabin pressure soon after taking off for Dallas, government officials said. Air traffic controllers couldn't raise anyone by radio. Fighter jets were sent after the plane and followed it for much of its flight but were unable to help. The pilots drew close and noticed no structural damage but were unable to see into the Learjet because its windows were frosted over, indicating the temperature inside was well below freezing.

Set apparently on autopilot, the plane cruised at a stable 45,000 feet or so, flying 1,400 miles straight up the nation's midsection, across half a dozen states, before it presumably ran out of fuel some four hours after it took off.

Stewart, 42, was one of the most recognizable players in golf because he wore traditional knickers and a tam-o'-shanter hat.

He won 18 tournaments, including three major championships. In June, he won his second U.S. Open, prevailing over Phil Mickelson with an astonishing 15-foot putt on the last hole.

"This is a tremendous loss for the entire golfing community and all of sports. He will always be remembered as a very special competitor and one who contributed enormously to the positive image of professional golf," PGA Tour Commissioner Tim Finchem said.

BASEBALL TEAM OF THE CENTURY

Touching them all

Power hitting, pitching behind success of Panther baseball

By Bill Ruthhart
 Associate sports editor

After 95 years of tradition, Eastern's baseball program has not only succeeded at several levels, but has sent more athletes on to the professional ranks than most of the rest of Eastern's athletic programs combined.

Over the past five decades, Panther baseball has seen 58 athletes drafted by professional teams with eight of those athletes succeeding at the major league level. Fifty-eight athletes being drafted over a 47 year period is truly amazing, but what is as equally impressive is how the Panther baseball program has managed to reach success at every level it has competed at.

Eastern has put together a 1231-998 record over its 95 year history for a .552 winning percentage. The Panthers have succeeded at the NAIA level where they made a World Series appearance in 1964 and two district tournament appearances in 1971 and '72 before moving up to the Division II level.

In 1982, their first year competing in Division II, the Panthers won the Mideast Regional and went on to a third place World Series finish. Eastern made four more regional appearances in 1975, '76, '78, and '81, winning their regional twice and placing second in the nation in 1981 and fifth in 1978 under head coach Tom McDevitt.

Most recently, the Eastern baseball team has seen success at the Division I level after making the switch in 1982. Last year's club won the Ohio Valley Conference Championship for the second straight season, went on to win the OVC Tournament and moved on to the NCAA Regional for the first time where they made a strong showing defeating Arizona.

That season, the best ever for the Panthers at the Division I level, ranks up there with the great seasons under McDevitt in the '70's.

"There were some very great teams in the '70's and there was a string of years where Eastern was at the top of Division II and was one of the premier teams in the country," current head coach Jim Schmitz said. "Last year was the greatest season since the move to Division I and that was a product of the teams before it."

None of the success seen in the 95 year history of Panther baseball would be possible without the individual efforts of the players selected to this Baseball Team of the Century. And while there were many close calls at every position, the nod went to a select group of 15 players and one coach who can proudly call themselves the best of the 20th century.

The Battery

The pitching staff of this All-Century team is led by none other than Marty Pattin, the biggest baseball icon in the history of Panther baseball, and perhaps even better known by most Eastern students for the local watering hole which bears his name.

"Marty Pattin is head and shoulders above any other pitcher at Eastern," McDevitt said of the 14-year professional pitcher. Pattin saw major league action with the Angels, Seattle Pilots, Brewers, Red Sox and Royals.

Pattin, who graduated in 1965, led the 1964 Panthers to the NAIA

Championships, going 10-1 in that season, leading the nation in strikeouts. He's the single season leader in wins, innings pitched, strikeouts and is also second on the career list in wins and third in innings pitched.

"He had a take-charge type of attitude and he was a bulldog type of guy on the mound," Gene Creek, fellow All-Century pitcher, said. "He knew what he wanted to do when he was out there and he was a man about his business on the mound. He was a great team player."

Following Pattin on the staff is Creek who graduated two years before Pattin but stayed on as a grad assistant to help coach the future major-leaguer.

"Gene had kind of a sinking fastball and he was the type of pitcher that went right after hitters," Pattin said. "He didn't back off of
