Pyles will attend courses taught by professors from the Harvard Graduate School of Education and from around the country. Topics will range from organizational and small group leadership to current issues in higher education.

As Dean of EIU's College of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, Pyles is responsible for leadership in all areas related to academic affairs and oversees numerous campus and community health education programs.

She received her doctorate degree in Higher Education Administration and Health Administration from West Virginia University and is a National Certified Counselor, Licensed Professional Counselor and Certified Health Education Specialist. She is also a registered nurse.

Sharon McDade, Director of the Management Development Program, said this year's admissions committee was extremely impressed with the quality of the applicant pool from which the participants were selected. "It was a very competitive situation, and we are very proud of the higher education leaders Harvard selects for the MDP."
