CHARLESTON, IL.--Members of the Coles County Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) were on the Eastern Illinois University campus recently to help the Lumpkin College of Business process 11,000 newsletters in record time, according to Judy Hofstrand, Director of Administration and Development for the College.

Pictured in the front row from the left are Dorothy Heddins, Norm Straider and Dorothy Honn. Back row, Carolyn Horsman of Sullivan, secretary to Lumpkin College of Business Dean Theodore Ivarie, Lois Payne, Mabel Fowler, Martha Gannaway, Joe Honn, Julia Blanford and Evelyn Vaught. All the seniors are Charleston residents.

The RSVP program has been in existence in Coles County for 15 years. It is designed to recruit volunteers who are 60 years old and over to do meaningful volunteer work for schools, offices, nursing homes and non-profit organizations.

The program has 400 volunteers who provide 35,000 hours of service annually in Coles County.

For further information about the program, contact Marilyn Strangeman at 345-9530.
