VIDEOCONFERENCE

Pat Stein of Charleston, assistant professor of home economics at Eastern and a member of the videoconference advisory board, said the live videoconference will feature discussions by industry and government environmental leaders, public health specialists, hazard evaluation experts, solid waste authorities and extension professionals.

They will provide information on the environment and how household cleaning products relate to it, such as how household cleaning products are released into the environment during use and disposal, how to read product labels for human safety and how to safely and properly dispose of commonly used household cleaning products.

The videoconference is sponsored by The Soap and Detergent Association and Ohio Cooperative Extension Service, The Ohio State University.

Eastern's School of Home Economics is providing the site for local viewing of the videoconference. For more information about the telecast, call Stein at 581-6351 or 581-6076.
