FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CHARLESTON, IL.--Twenty people from midwestern and southwestern universities attended a two day faculty development seminar on occupational safety and health at Eastern Illinois University in mid-April.

Conducted by the EIU Management/Marketing Department, the seminar was sponsored by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health.

"The conference was part of Project Minerva which is a business school safety and health education program supported by the federal government, private industry, academic institutions, trade associations and organized labor," said Dr. Foster Rinefort, coordinator of the EIU College of Business MBA program and seminar co-director.

"The seminar described how information and materials on occupational safety and health can be integrated into academic undergraduate and graduate work in management," Rinefort said.

Those who participated are: (front row) Hans Bocker of Western Illinois, Jerry Wall of Northeast Louisiana, Richard Allison of Houston-Clearlake, Douglas Grider of Louisiana Tech, Nazim Ahmed of Ball State and Foster Rinefort of Eastern Illinois; (standing) Jerry Geisler of Eastern Illinois, Jerry Chapman of Amarillo College, Oliver Mulford of Mankato State, Paul Smith of Eastern Illinois, Sue Greenfeld of Univ. of Baltimore, Stuart Rosenkrantz of Eastern Illinois, James Walters of Robert Taft Laboratories, Edward Brankey of Eastern Illinois, Roger Schoenfeldt of Murray State, Mahmod Bahae of Central Michigan, Mike Taubitz of General Motors, Ralph Catalanello of Northern Illinois, Paul Keaton of Wisconsin-LaCrosse and Hoyt Hayes of Northeast Missouri.
