Course Overview: In this general education humanities course, we will be reading literature—both fiction and non-fiction—that grapples with markers that crucially define who we understand ourselves to be and how society views us: our age, our race, our gender. One objective of this course is to develop further a critical appreciation of and a confidence in reading and discussing literature and the ways literature speaks of and to the human condition. Furthermore, in this course, you will have many opportunities for extending and enhancing skills in reading, writing, and speaking in general, in ways that will benefit you throughout your University career, and, indeed, your life.

This class is discussion-driven. This means that students need to be prepared for each meeting, which means that you have read and thought about the text assigned for the day and are able to initiate or contribute to discussion with relevant and meaningful questions or comments that indicate you have attempted to grapple with the assigned texts and questions that frame the course.

Texts:

- Cisneros, Sandra
  - House on Mango Street
- Douglass, Frederick
  - Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, a slave
- Fuller, Alexandra
  - Don’t Let’s Go to the Dogs Tonight
- Lahiri, Jhumpa
  - The Namesake
- Neely, Barbara
  - Blanche on the Lam
- Tan, Amy
  - The Joy Luck Club

Please note: You will also need a College Level Dictionary to succeed in this course.

Course Assignments: To achieve the objectives described above students will need to keep up with the rigorous reading schedule and actively participate in the class discussion. The following assignments will foster the active engagement necessary to make this a productive and exciting learning experience.

I. Exams and Quizzes: *There will be a mid-term (20%) and a final examination (25%). I reserve the right to give pop quizzes as warranted if I sense students are not keeping up with their readings.

II. Papers: One paper 3-4 pages (15%) and One paper 5-6 pages (20%)

II1. Participation (20%)
Participation means showing up physically for class with your textbooks or handouts/homework due that day having turned off your cell phone and with your attention focused on what we are doing in class. It means participating in the day’s discussion by preparing comments or questions and responding to other people’s comments or questions. It also means looking for ways to identify links between what one person is saying and your own or another’s comments. In relation to questions, I expect that you will look up words you don’t understand and try to find out the answer to your question on your own to the best of your ability and to be able to say if you haven’t been able to come to a satisfactory answer why the question matters to our understanding of the text. Finally, there will be a number of assignments that will be part of your participation grade.
