Dec. 15-19 is Finals’ Week and I’ll announce in class date/time of our final exam.

We are going to read a lot of literature in this course, as you can see by the assignments listed on this and the preceding page, and I’ll expect each student to read every novel, play, poem and short story assigned—and to be prepared to discuss each one in class—by the date a given work is scheduled for discussion.

Each student will be required to write two (2) essays (3-5 pages, typed and double-spaced), one midterm exam and a final exam. I will not accept any late essays or exams, and students’ essays/exams are to be their own work.

I don’t like absences—my own or my students’—and this partially explains why I will lower a student’s grade for the semester by one letter if he/she has more than three unexcused absences from this class; and if a student has more than four unexcused absences I will fail that student for the semester.

With all the above cautionary words said, then, what needs saying is that the success of this course depends upon how disciplined each of us is, how generously and thoughtfully verbal in class discussions each of us is, and how open to learning about our nation and our selves—from American literature and each other—each of us is.
