Course Description, Design, and Goals: Published between 1852 and 1887, the seven novels that we will read for this course represent the triumph of the Victorian novel. This is also the period in which England made the transition “from a predominantly rural to a predominantly urban society” (Williams 165). Since Dickens is primarily associated with London and Hardy with rural Wessex, we will begin by setting up “a contrast between the fiction of the city and the fiction of the country,” as discussed by Raymond Williams in The Country and the City. But I expect that every class member will develop her own critical interest in and approach to these works during the term, and that sharing our various discoveries in seminar presentations and discussions will result in a broad understanding of Dickens, Hardy, and the Victorian novel generally.

Texts: as listed in the Schedule below, plus handouts from me and group presenters

Requirements and Grading:
1. group presentation – 30%
2. research paper – 30%
3. final exam – 30%
4. class participation – 10%

Course Policies:
You must come to every graduate seminar meeting prepared to contribute to our discussions. Please prepare reading assignments carefully, consult secondary sources, develop your ideas for a research project early in the semester, and share your thoughts, questions and illuminations with the class.
